Mansions on Rails!

By 1890 the last frontier had been pushed back...railroads linked East with West. America was ready to enter the 20th century!

There are no better monuments to the men who built and owned America's great railway systems than the privately owned and maintained railroad cars.

Aboard them, the great moguls of an uninhibited era of growth and expansion sat in regal splendor. Gould, Whitney, Vanderbilt and others built fabulous rolling palaces that contained solid gold and marble plumbing fixtures, liveried housefootmen, working fireplaces, solid silver truck and brake rigging, libraries of rare first editions and magnificent wine cellars. According to Lucius Beebe's new book, "Mansions on Rails," the fabulous cars could be seen at society's watering spots—Palm Beach, Louisville, Newport, Del Monte.

One such "rolling estate" has been recovered and is being restored. Built in 1886 for Henry Morrison Flagler, the man of vision who developed the state of Florida, the private railroad car "Rambler" will soon be on view to the public. Original cost of the "Rambler" was $70,000—and it was judged the most beautiful of all the private railroad cars.

Soon to go on exhibit at the Henry Morrison Flagler Museum at Whitehall Mansion in Palm Beach, Florida, the "Rambler" is a fitting monument to the man who built Palm Beach, the Florida Keys and the Florida East Coast Railroad.

Letter to the Editor

Editor, Marshall Courier:

CHRISTMAS TREATISE
The Lord Master said: "I will declare to thee that utmost lore, Whole and particular, which, when thou knowest, Leaveth no more to know here in this world. Of many thousand mortals, one perchance, Striveth for Truth; and of those few that strive, Nay, and rise high, one only here and there, Knoweth Me, as I am, the very Truth."
Science at last finds God. What will appear in this treatise will be of profound interest, and possibly of vital importance to you who read—to your general physical, mental and spiritual well-being, to your success and happiness—to your whole life. I would suggest that it be read carefully and without prejudice. Let there be no doubt that what Science is discovering and making available to every clear-thinking man today will benefit him or her in due time, just as we make ourselves conversant with what is taking place. Become familiar with the new findings of modern science as it explains what is called religion, and we shall benefit; disregard it and go on in the same old ruts as most people do, square pegs in round holes, and we shall suffer. Hard-headed, matter-of-fact men of science, men who would be the last to accept a Supreme Architect without overwhelming evidence, who hitherto have re-

get for myself? The high and the low fight one another for gain, and the kingdom is shaken. When gain is put before right, only robbery can fill the law, and bring on rapacious, corrupt, perfidious, or tyrannical statesmen and educators. Consequently the voice of human nature cries aloud, all over the world, for exorcism and vengeance. The great man is he that does not lose the child heart. Man's heart is love. Man's road is right. To leave the road unfollowed, to let the heart stray and know not where to seek it, that is sad indeed. The scholar's way is no more than seeking our stray heart. The particular path to be pursued to achieve knowledge is not a single one, but a multitude and left to one's own choosing, but as to knowledge connected with books, there is a step to be taken before one can fairly enter upon the path. In the immense field of this kind of knowledge, innumerable are the paths, and Gramma is the gate of entrance to them all. And if gramma is useful in attaining of knowledge, it is absolutely necessary in order to enable the possessor to communicate, by writing, or speaking, that knowledge to others, without which communication the possession must be comparatively useless to himself in many cases, and, in almost all cases, to the rest of mankind. The action of men proceed from their thoughts. In order to obtain the cooperation, the concurrence, or the consent of others, we must communicate our thoughts to them. The means of this communication are words and Gramma teaches us how to make use of them words. Therefore, in all the ranks, degrees, and situations of life, a knowledge of the principles and rules of the mechanics of writing must be useful; in some situations it must be necessary to avoid really injurious errors; and in no situation that calls on man to his thoughts upon paper, can the possession of it fail to be a source of self-gratification or want of it a cause of mortification and sorrow.

Simplicity Marks This Year's Greeting Cards

Simplicity, polished until it has the patina of elegance, is the keynote of this year's Christmas cards.

Subtle designs have been combined with subdued color schemes to create high-style cards in keeping with the preferences Americans are expressing in many fields, says a spokesman for a card manufacturer.

Striking results have been achieved by the use of such unlikely colors as tan or brown and gray on white. Even tone-on-tone combinations, such as gold trees or gold holly embossed on a gold background, have been employed.

In other departures from the traditional red and green, golden snowflakes of varying sizes sparkle against a background of soft dappled coloring on one new greeting. A tree festooned with real fashions, in pink, gives a different atmosphere to another. Sparkle, tiny jewels and gold and silver highlight many new cards.

Particularly handsome are several renderings—some in pen-and-ink—of cities and skylines aglow in the snow-drenched twilight of a winter evening. Other urban views, as well as some usual scenes, are in water colors. The number of sophisticated holiday greetings does not mean a shortage of cards with traditional symbols of Santa Claus, poinsettias and pine cones.

In fact, these subjects are available in an increased variety of stylings. Santa Claus for example, is rendered in many ways—often with a beard formed of plastic granules or a suit enriched with furry flocking.

Those who prefer Christmas cards that reflect the true meaning of the season will be attracted to the expanded assortment of religious greetings. Full-color photographic views of miniature scenes, featuring statuettes of the Wise Men, the Nativity, and other events of the religious festival, are particularly heartwarming in their beauty. A group of cards designed in Italy reflects old world techniques in liturgical art.

Even the envelopes that will contain this year's holiday greetings have been decorated. Many feature scrollwork on the flap or the front. Others are embellished with bands or stripes of color, occasionally forming a ribbon criss-cross to turn the envelope into a gift package.

"Man in Moon" cake is only one of many easy-to-make novelty cakes to delight the hearts of the young. Favorite nursery story characters, animals, cars, can be interpreted in frosted cake by the simple means of a cardboard, covered and bound with foil and a package of one of the new deluxe cake mixes.

Ice cream and cake! To the young in years, the mere mention of such delights as these means a party—a wonderful, fun-time birthday celebration or just any party will soon be taking place. Unfortunately, giving a child's party isn't always a treat for mother. She has to think of clever ideas to amuse and spark already vivid imaginations. She has to decide what to serve—and what's more, prepare it! One answer to this problem is to use the new deluxe cake mixes, inspired by Duncan Hines, which can be mixed in just two minutes. The finished cake will delight one and all.

From a nursery rhyme book, select your child's favorite character. Bake that character into a charming "Kiddie Cake." You'll be amazed at the ease with which you can do this. Besides, it's fun!

For a moon cake, sketch a crescent moon on a card-board, about 12-inches from tip to tip and cut it out. Cover top and bottom with aluminum foil. Next, take a piece of heavy-duty foil and fold it lengthwise to within 1/4 inch of the other edge. Fold this again in half, and then a third time, always folding it lengthwise so that you end up with a strip about 2-inches wide and long enough to fit around the pattern of the moon. This strip serves as the sides of your homemade pan. Place the strip around the outline of the moon and fold the 1/4-inch single layer under, taping as you go. When completely around, let ends of strip overlap about 1 inch and tape.

Prepare a package of the new Duncan Hines Deluxe Cake Mix—yellow, devil's food or burnt sugar will make a wonderfully high and light crescent moon. Fill the moon pan only half full and bake according to directions on package. When cake is cool, cut the sides of the pan and lift the bottom off. The bottom can be re-used. In fact, if you grease the whole pan well, chances are you can save it all for re-use. Frost your "man-in-the-moon" with a fluffy orange frosting and use gumdrops to make the face of your fun-time cake.

ops Explain Their REA Position

Association of Rural Electric Cooperatives has begun an educational campaign designed to point up the distinction between these co-operatives and the Rural Electrification Administration (REA), a federal agency.

The West Kentucky Rural Electric Cooperative serves 3162 members in Marshall County and a total of 13,781 members in this and adjoining counties. J. K. Smith, executive manager of the state association, said the organization will use every means possible to establish that the electric cooperatives are member-owned by local citizens of the Kentucky communities which they serve.

"We are properly called Rural Electric Cooperations (RECO)," Smith said, adding that, "Our relationship to the REA is the same relationship as that of an individual to a bank: we borrow money from REA and pay it back, with interest, in regular payments."

"Any other individual or firm agreeing to serve America's farms with electricity can do the same thing."

"The REA does not tell us how to manage our business. That is decided by our members here in Kentucky. We believe it is important to emphasize that we are not government-owned or managed."

REA Administrator David Hamill in Washington recently made a similar statement.

"In an effort to carry out the spirit of a resolution to this effect adopted by our state association recently, we are now

Uncle Ned ... From Dogtown

DEAR MISTER EDITOR:

I was about to be late gitting my little piece to the paper this week on account of taking up the last two days trying to put through a phone call to my neighbor across the creek. Ever time you pick up a phone on these country lines all you hear is wimmen. I reckon it's the same way in town. I wonder what wimmen did to pass the time back afore they spent half of it talking on the phone.

A feller up at the country store was bragging the other night that he could split a city telephone directory in two pieces with his bare hands. Ed Doolittle allowed as how that wasn't nothing, that his old lady could tie up 300 mile of telephone wire with her chin. And that about states the case. The way I finally got in touch with my neighbor was to go see him. But, wading the creek and all, I beat the telephone system by about three days, the way wimmen use 'em now.

Only trouble was, Mister Editor, it'd been so long since I started gitting in touch with him, I had forgot what I wanted to get in touch with him about. So we just set and talked a spell. He was lamenting that Santa Claus travels a little slower ever year. He used to take off from the North Pole early Christmas week and git here in plenty of time. Now, says my neighbor, he announces his departure around Thanksgiving. I can see his point of view. Mister Editor, on account a feller couldn't keep bad her Christmas tree set up in the parlor since Labor Day and the last time I looked it was starting to sprout. My neighbor said things was even worse at his house, said his old lady done most of her Christmas shopping back in August at them clearance sales.

But my neighbor is the sort of feller that's always grieving for the good old days. I recollect once up at the country store when he was grieving about things coming to such a pass that a feller couldn't keep bad luck away no more by knocking on wood, on account of everything being plastic. He has already blamed two crop failures on plastic.

Speaking of Christmas shopping, I got a tip fer you men-folks. Just don't believe your old lady when she tells you she don't want nothing fer Christmas. I fell fer that once and things was mighty cool at our house plum past Easter. And to be on the safe side, the less she says she wants fer Christmas, the more you better git her. Wimmen is like that, always talking in riddles—and on the telephone.

Yours truly,
Uncle Ned.
