Russia Boasts World's Most Powerful Broadcast System

By Paul Gilbert

Moscow—AP—Although it is generally recognized abroad as a media center, Moscow is a bit of a media backwater in comparison to the governmental and cultural capitals of the world. The U.S. B.B.C. station broadcasts in English, while the U.S. R.C.A. station broadcasts in Russian, and while the Russian government is very active in broadcasting, it is not as successful as some believe.

In Moscow, the Russian government has invested heavily in broadcasting, and in fact, it is the largest single contributor to the country's media. The government runs a number of radio stations, including the All Russia Broadcasting Corporation, which operates the largest network of radio stations in the world.

The All Russia Broadcasting Corporation broadcasts in a variety of languages, including Russian, English, and French. It has thousands of broadcast schedules and is in control of all aspects of the media in the country. The government is very active in promoting the Russian language and culture through its media outlets.

The government's investment in broadcasting has paid off, as the All Russia Broadcasting Corporation is one of the largest and most powerful media organizations in the world. It has a large audience and is able to reach a large number of people with its messages.
