First '48 Snow Is Seen Today

Reed State Reports

Frost Theme

What was probably the first cold wave of the season was reported throughout the South today. The light snow falling in the Charlotte area was the most widespread, but the cold front is expected to cause temperatures to drop to the low teens by tonight. The front is moving north through the mountains, where temperatures are expected to drop to the single digits. The cold wave is expected to last through tomorrow, with temperatures in the teens and low 20s likely.
