Splantagenet A

Coveded Island

By J. B. Elderstine, Jr.

Splantagenet A, main island of the Splantagenet archipelago in the Arctic Ocean, is a significant research site for the United States Navy. The island, which was previously uninhabited, has been used for scientific research and military operations.

The island was discovered by the U.S. Navy in 1957 and has since been used for various research projects, including satellite tracking and encryption research. The island is currently used as a research site for the Navy's Advanced Research Projects Agency (ARPA).

The island is approximately 20 miles in diameter and is surrounded by a frigid ocean that is teeming with marine life. The island is also home to several rare species of birds and mammals, including the arctic fox and the arctic hare.

The island's climate is harsh, with temperatures ranging from -50°F to 40°F in the winter and -20°F to 30°F in the summer. The island is also subject to strong winds and heavy snowfall.

Splantagenet A is a crucial research site for the Navy's advanced research programs, and its isolation and harsh environment make it an ideal location for testing new technologies and equipment.
