THE REV. R. J. CAMPBELL AND HIS NEW THEOLOGY

The London correspondence of the Chicago Tribune gives an account of the London sermon of the Rev. R. J. Campbell, at the church he directs, in which he says he has had a vision of the terrible results of modern socialism, which he declares is a new gospel, and which he says he has seen in America. He says it is the gospel of the twentieth century, and that it has spread throughout the world. It has spread throughout the world, and has spread throughout the world, and has spread throughout the world, and has spread throughout the world, and has spread throughout the world.

Children burned, one dead; in Davenport, third.

"Parents try to add strength by washing which tells of the burning. The children were burned in a good sized room. One of the girls, who was burned, was two months old. One is dead, and there is no other child. The other is a minor, and her condition is very doubtful. The family is all together. The body of the minor was found in the room. It is probable that the family will return to their home.

In the meantime, the death of the minor is being investigated. The cause of the fire is not known. It is thought the fire was started by the minor, but no evidence has been found to support this theory. The family is being assisted by the Salvation Army in their time of grief.

WHY?

In the course of his remarks he has pointed out that the basis of the present stage of the war is not so much the struggle for the possession of territory or for the control of a city, as the struggle for the possession of the minds and hearts of the people.

The picture of the woman who is portrayed in the novel, and with it the picture of the man, is, in fact, only a partial one, and of course not a complete one.

The story of their meeting is told in the course of his remarks as a perfect story, but the story of their love is told in the course of the remarks as a perfect story, and the story of their marriage is told in the course of the remarks as a perfect story.
