Plenty Of Evidence For Peace Hopes

Senator John F. Kennedy, in a recent interview, suggested that a few days ago, while walking by the Potomac River, he was asked by a woman about the possibility of a major war. His reply was: "For the time being the possibility of a major war is small." This statement was made in response to a question from a woman who had overheard him conversing with a friend about the conflict between the United States and the Soviet Union.

The senator went on to say that the situation was not so serious that he thought there was a possibility of a major war. He added that the two countries were working together to prevent a major war.

A major war is defined as a war in which both the United States and the Soviet Union are involved. The senator's statement is an indication that he believes that the two countries are working together to prevent a major war.
