Budapest—Budapest's (previous name, Pest) mayor called today on all Budapest residents to cooperate in the formation of a local defense and rescue team in the event of an earthquake. Mayor Miklosh Kovacs addressed the local citizens as a part of his city-wide mobilization program, which aims to prepare the city for natural disasters. The mayor emphasized the importance of community involvement in building a resilient defense against potential calamities. His call for cooperation was met with enthusiasm, and residents expressed their readiness to participate in such initiatives.
