National Forests

The story of the forest of Maine in the making will be told in this month's issue of "The Oregonian," a weekly magazine published by the Oregonian Publishing Company.

The forest was originally established in 1911 as a result of the efforts of the Maine Forest Service. It has since been expanded and now covers an area of nearly 1,000,000 acres.

The forest is divided into three districts: the western district, which includes much of the woods on the western side of the state; the central district, which includes most of the woods on the eastern side; and the northern district, which includes the woods on the northern side.

Crisis Roots Lie Deep

by Lewis Macfadden

The new roots of the country's economic difficulties are found in the post-war period and the effects of the war on the economy. The war has caused a serious decrease in production, and the country is now facing a difficult economic situation.

It was a time of deep concern among business men over the future of the country. The war had caused a sharp decrease in production, and the economic situation was becoming more serious. The government was forced to take measures to control the economy, and the country was facing a difficult economic situation.
