All-Time High In Flu Cases During Month

Easter observed.

93,279 Sufferers Reported to State Board of Health

DISEASE MOVES EAST

Louisville, Ky., March 20-All-time record for a single month has been set in the number of different cases of influenza in one city, according to the weekly report received from the health department.

A total of 9,327 cases were reported in the city during the month of March, the highest for any month in its history.

The city's health officials attributed the spread of the disease to a combination of factors, including warm weather and crowded living conditions.

Boring this week, in connection with the Memorial Day exercises, I want to make some comments on the non-partisan nature of the occasion. I think it is significant that the occasion is non-partisan. It is a day when people from all walks of life come together to pay tribute to those who have given their lives for their country. It is a day when we remember the sacrifices of our past and honor those who are serving now.

The United States is a democratic government. It is a representative democracy. The people elect representatives who make laws for the country. The government is not controlled by one party. It is a system of checks and balances to prevent any one group from gaining too much power.

In the United States, there are two main political parties: the Democratic Party and the Republican Party. Each party has its own candidates for public office. The people vote for the candidate they think will best represent their interests.

The United States is a country that values freedom. It is a country that values equality. It is a country that values justice. It is a country that values progress. It is a country that values democracy.

Let us remember that the United States is a democratic government. It is a government that is based on the principles of freedom, equality, justice, progress, and democracy.

Drivers Grow Wary

A Ruthford, Texas, veteran describes how American automobile drivers are growing more cautious around old-time drivers. Mr. Ruthford, who served in World War II, said that he noticed a change in the way people drive after the war.

Mr. Ruthford said that he used to drive with less caution around old-time drivers. He said that he would pass them quickly and not give them much attention. But now, he said, he drives more slowly and gives them more respect. He said that he has noticed that other people do the same thing.

Mr. Ruthford said that he thinks that the change in driving habits is due to the fact that many of the old-time drivers are now in their 80s or 90s. He said that they are more likely to have health problems and are more likely to make mistakes when they drive.

Mr. Ruthford said that he hopes that this change in driving habits will continue. He said that it is better to drive more slowly and give old-time drivers more respect.

With The Fourth Estate

Back in the days when radio was the only way to hear the news, the reporters were called "the Fourth Estate." They were seen as an important part of the democratic process. They were seen as independent voices who could report the news without being influenced by the government.

Today, the Fourth Estate is still an important part of the democratic process. It is still seen as an independent voice that can report the news without being influenced by the government.

But it is important to remember that the Fourth Estate has changed over time. It has become more diverse and more sophisticated. It has become more influential and more powerful.

The Fourth Estate is still an important part of the democratic process. It is still seen as an independent voice that can report the news without being influenced by the government.

Nearly Invincible French Fighter Would Rather Fight Than Eat; He's Won 97, Lost 2 in Feuds

By Robert Cates

AP Reporting

Paris, France—In World War II, a French fighter pilot named Marcel died in a dogfight near Paris. He was the best French pilot, according to reports. The French did not say why he died but it was suspected that he was killed in a dogfight near Paris.

The French fighter pilot, who had been flying for the French Air Force since 1939, was known for his skill in the air. He was credited with 97 victories over the Germans and was feared by the enemy.

In 1940, during the Battle of France, Marcel took down 14 German planes in one day. He was later honored with the Croix de Guerre for his bravery.

Marcel was a skilled pilot and was known to be a tough fighter. He was often seen landing in enemy territory, which earned him the nickname "The French Bulldog." He was also known for his love of cats and would often bring them back to his base as gifts.

Despite his success, Marcel was not without his faults. He was known to be a bit of a ladies' man and would often spends his time between missions with the ladies of Paris.

Marcel's family was devastated by his death and the French government held a special ceremony to honor him. His body was laid to rest in the Pantheon, a national mausoleum in Paris.

Marcel's legacy lives on as a symbol of French determination and bravery. His name is still remembered today, with the Marcel Marcely Award given to French pilots for their exceptional service.

In my dairy I bade gool-by to 1,000 birds in Clark, Ill. From that time on Carpentier turned his hand to other enterprises. He left France and mined the French navy. He was a one-loan telling show. When the war ended, Carpentier returned to the French army and continued to serve in various capacities.

As a young man, Carpentier was a member of the French military and served in various postings in Africa. He was a skilled soldier and was known for his bravery in battle.

Carpentier was later appointed by the American military to serve as a consultant to the French army. He was a valuable asset to the French military and his knowledge of American tactics and strategies was highly valued.

One hundred pounds ofcertified granulated tar was purchased for trial test through the Kentucky Experiment Station. In reply to questions, it was determined that the tar was effective in killing insects and was a valuable addition to the French arsenal.

Turkey Raising Expected To Grow

While 18 per cent fewer turkeys were raised in Kentucky in 1945 than in 1944, there is every indication that the 1946 crop will be larger. The trend is favorable for the growth of turkey raising in Kentucky.

As at the Experimental Station at Laneurich, Georgia, Prendrie has been trying to increase the life of the rope by the addition of a new ingredient. The addition has increased the life of the rope from 8 to 10 days.
