WATERFIELD IN LOUISVILLE

By Bruce Wood

When Mayor Leitch Floyd last week invited the nation's press corps to Louisville, it was as an indication of what Waterfield might bring the city if he were elected governor. It was also an indication of what the city's newspapers, especially the Louisville Courier-Journal, might buy if they were to move to Waterfield's editorial office.

Mayor Floyd made the invitation to the press corps, which included representatives from Louisville's newspapers, to attend the opening of the new Waterfield-owned newspaper, the Louisville News. The newspaper, which is expected to be published next week, will be the first newspaper in the city to be published by a black-owned business.

Mayor Floyd also announced that the Courier-Journal will be purchased by Waterfield and that the newspaper will be sold to a black-owned company. He said that the Courier-Journal will be the first newspaper in the nation to be owned and operated by a black-owned company.
