Meyer Tells Of Pre-Election Visit To FDR President's Son Had Invited Him, Several Others

ELLIOT TO TESTIFY

By John Mor. New York - Henry Haggard, best friend of Franklin D. Roosevelt's son, has been authorized today by President Roosevelt to testify before the investigating committee at its inquiry into $40,000,000 of wartime corruption or profiteering in the Hughes plant, redecoration of the Sun plant, and other matters.

President has assigned to Elliot Haggard the task of giving evidence at the hearings, which have been called by the committee.

Meyer, who has been invited to the hearings by the committee, testified that Roosevelt had called him to 501 Maple Avenue in New York last spring to ask him to go to Washington to discuss the tuning of the General Electric plant.

Roosevelt was drafting a report recommending that the Air Corps take over the design and production of the B-24 bomber.

Roosevelt also asked Meyer to go to the White House to talk over the question of the plant, which had been closed by the government.

Meanwhile, Senator Peppard, who represented Tennessee, had been appointed by the president to investigate the question of the plant.

In addition to this spending, the government had spent $100,000,000 in buying the Hughes plant.
