Total to date, 226.
New foci, 10.
Total to date, 360.
Cases remaining under treatment, 287.
New Orleans, La., Aug. 24.—With the fever here coming steadily under control and apprehension no longer felt for a dangerous epidemic; the Federal authorities are anxious to put restrictions against free intercourse between New Orleans and infected communities in Louisiana and elsewhere. The policy of such a move was fully discussed in the conference of the fever fighters with Gov. Blanchard and the results are to be made known at meeting of the State Board of Health which has been called to take place here tomorrow.
It is predicted that a decrease in the number of new cases will take place in a few days.

Popular Young Man Dies.

Charles S. Wilkins, son of J. A. Wilkins died at his home two and a half miles this side of Kansas, Wednesday Aug. 23, 1905.

of heart trouble. He was born October 27, 1875 and died, aged 29 years, 9 months and 27 days. He had been afflicted with heart trouble and dropsy for many years, but he bore his afflictions with patience and fortitude. Just before his death his mother asked him if he had to die, if he thought he would be saved. He said "yes" and it is believed from what he said, and his life that he is now at rest. The funeral services were held by Rev. Robert T. Davis, of this city and the remains laid to rest in the Kansas cemetery.

For Sale--Bargain.

$50 In Two Cases.

Jake Courtney of the Dublin Section submitted his cases before Judge Webb Tuesday and was fined $50 each in two cases for selling whiskey without authority.

All Bosh.

Paducah, Ky., Aug. 24.—The Interstate Life Assurance company, of Indianapolis, Ind., and its local agent, Mike G. Caldwell, have been made defendants in seven suits filed today in the circuit court by John G. Lovett, commonwealth's attorney, and Eugene Graves, county attorney, representing the State of Kentucky.

The suits are for $500 in each case, making a total of $3,500. The attorneys for the commonwealth claim that the company has violated the state law by giving rebates on life insurance to J. H. Bugg, Philip Rogers, James M. Walton, Lee Potter, H. T. Rivers, Rufe Downs and James H. Nagel.

Notice.

All parties recently notified to take out their special license to practice professions and do other kinds of business in the City of Mayfield, Ky., and failing to do so, will at once obtain City Treasurers receipt and deliver to the undersigned City Clerk on or before Aug. 26, 1905, and obtain their special license. A warrant of arrest will positively issue for those failing to comply with this notice. This Aug. 24, 1905.
T. W. McNeill,
City Clerk.

Nothing on the Market Equal to Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy.

This fact is well known to druggists everywhere, and nine out of ten will give their customers this preparation when the best is asked for. Mr. Obe Witmer, a prominent druggist of Joplin, Mo., in a circular to his customers, says: "There is nothing on the market in the way of patent medicine which equals Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy for bowel complaints. We sell and recommend this preparation." For sale by Leon Evans.

Receiver Appointed.

Attorney R. O. Hester at this place has been appointed receiver for W. R. Ford who has been doing business at Boaz and who recently filed a petition in bankruptcy. Mr. Hester will at once wind up the business.

A little forethought may save you no end of trouble. Anyone who makes it a rule to keep Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy at hand knows this to be a fact. For sale by Leon Evans.

WARRANTS

ISSUED.

For the Arrest of Two Young Men in the North Part of the County.

Last Saturday while the fast train was coming at 40 miles an hour, this side of Boaz and Mayfield Creek, the engine tore loose from the main track, and ran away from it. At the time, the train separated, two men were seen to jump off and go towards the woods. The engine came back and found the pin that held the engine and train together had been pulled out, and of course there was then nothing left to hold them together. The train men knew that somebody did it. So the theory was that somebody had been stealing a ride on the blind baggage.

The railroad then began an investigation, and heard that Dr. Hargroves at Hickory had been called to dress the arm and shoulder of a man who was hurt on the railroad. The investigation developed that Elvis and Elva Holmes, two young men living east of Hickory Grove were charged with the offense.

The railroad detective came in and had warrants issued for them. The one that was hurt was arrested and is now under bond while the other came in Friday and gave himself up. One of them is about 20 years old and the other 25.

Chief McNutt informed the Messenger reporter that the young men belong to good families and claim they were drunk and hardly knew what they were doing, if they did it at all.

Farmers Picnic.

There will be a large crowd of people in the city tomorrow to attend the farmers basket picnic, which is to take place in the court house yard, and during the day much speaking will take place, and a general good time.

THE MESSENGER OFFICE

Headquarters for Effective Advertising and First Class Job Work.

THE HOME OF THE ADVERTISERS.

The Messenger Job Department is fast becoming the recognized place at which all kinds of first class job work can be done on short notice.

The business man of today, wants his job work done the best, quickest and cheapest and upon investigation nearly all such work is now given to the Messenger office. These are times of close business competition,—a day of newspaper advertising and the distribution of large well printed circulars.

Nearly all of the big circulars that are now sent out over the county are printed at the Messenger office.

As to advertising the Messenger has no competition when the circulation is considered.

The business man of today places his advertising in the columns of newspapers that have the largest number of readers and it is universally conceded that the Messenger stands alone without a competitor, hence its columns are constantly filled with "ads" from our best business men.

WHALES CAUGHT IN NETS.

Japanese Have a Peculiar and Dangerous Method of Taking the Monsters.

Whales are captured in nets by the Japanese. The whalers put off from the shore as quietly as possible, and when they come within the proper distance of their objective the boats, which have hitherto worked in couples, separate and, dropping their nets as they go, work round to the rear and flanks of their expected kill. The nets are made in large squares, each side being about 40 feet long. One net is composed of six squares in line and the squares are fastened to each other lightly. When all is ready the boats, which have worked round to the rear of the whale, then commence to drive him gently toward the nets. Moving along lazily at first, the whale soon realizes that something untoward is happening, and, hurrying forward, dashes onto one of the nets. This is the critical moment, and when the fishermen see that the whale is well in the center of one of the squares they raise a great shout and charge in upon him.

When the whale is about spent a man chosen for his strength, activity, pluck, coolness and general fitness for his work then leaps upon his back and with a great triangular-shaped knife proceeds to cut two great gashes in his body just back of his head. Through the underlying blubber and these two gashes he passes a rope, and, knotting it, makes a loop of it. He then repeats the same operation as far back on the body as he can. When the fight has been completely knocked out of the whale boats range along side of him and by the help of the loops already mentioned the hapless cetacean is slung between them in such a manner as to minimize the danger of his carcass sinking.

Then the boats form in procession, and, making for the shore, there commences the most curious part of the whole affair. The whalers, with real fervor and in the most solemn manner possible, begin a chanting prayer for the ease of the departing spirit by calling out: "Joraku! Joraku! Joraku!" in low, deep tones. Upon the third day after the kill a memorial service is held in the village temple and prayers are offered for the repose of the dead whale's soul.

MILLET'S GREAT INFLUENCE

A Host of Painters Followed Him in Depicting Examples of Peasant Life on Canvas.

In his own words, Millet tried to depict "the fundamental side of men and things," says St. Nicholas. His subject was the peasant life; not the representation of it such as one sees in opera, nor the pretty, sentimental aspect of it; but the actual drama of labor continuously proceeding through the four seasons—the "cry of the soil," echoing in the hearts of the patient, plodding, God-fearing toilers. Everything was typical. We have spoken of his "Sower." Of another picture the critic Castagnary wrote: "Do you remember his 'Reaper'?" He might have reaped the whole earth!

Everything Millet did was full of a deep seriousness and sincerity. He was an "easy" painter, so that his greatness as an artist is perhaps more clear in the black and white than in the colored subjects. Certainly in his crayon drawings, lithographs and etchings he proved himself to be one of that limited number of artists who may be reckoned master draftsmen. Moreover, the character that he expresses is of that grand and elemental quality which sometimes reminds us of Michelangelo.

Millet's influence produced a host of painters of the peasant, among whom the strongest are the Frenchman L'Hermite and Israels, the Dutchman. These, like him, have represented their subject with sympathy and with understanding also.

Ignoring the Unpleasant. How exquisite in life is the art of not seeing many things, and forgetting many that have been seen. —James Lane Allen.

IN A TERRIBLE FIX.

"Now, 'Rastus'—and his sister picked a thread or two off his coat, and hesitated, as if thinking how to break the news gently—"I want to tell you about a plan I've got in my head."

"I know what it is," interrupted her brother, turning pale. "I knew all about it before I came down here."

"I'd like to know how?" asked Mrs. Green, in great surprise. "I never told anybody except John, and I'm sure he hasn't let it out."

"No, he hasn't," answered Mr. Bangs. "But the minute I read your letter, I felt what was in the wind. You didn't need to say in so many words that you'd got a match planned out, but I understood it well enough. Who is it, Selina? Better get the load off your mind as soon as possible. I'm prepared to know the worst," and Mr. Bangs gave utterance to a sigh of resignation.

"It's a widow," answered Selina, "just the kind of a woman to suit you, 'Rastus.' I do hope you'll be sensible this time, and not let your foolish bashfulness spoil your chances of getting a good wife."

"A widow?"—Mr. Bangs turned a trifle paler and shivered—"I'm afraid I can't stand this siege, Selina. I came mighty near knocking under to the old maid last summer, but I was helped out of the scrape some way. I've always heard say that a man couldn't hold out long against a widow if she'd got her mind really made up to get him."

"Don't be a fool, 'Rastus,'" said his sister, tersely. "Maria's too good for you, and, if you know when you're well off, you'll make sure of her."

"Maybe she won't be made sure of," said Mr. Bangs, to whom this conversation was somewhat alarming.

"Oh, yes, she will," answered Selina. "I've talked with her about matters, and I know she'd have no objections."

"Good gracious, Selina!" exclaimed Mr. Bangs, perspiring all over, "you don't mean to say that you've actually talked with this woman about my marrying her, do you? Why, she'll expect me to do it, if you have, and, if I don't, she'll be having me up for breach of promise."

"Of course she expects you to marry her, and so do I," answered Selina, as if that settled the matter. "Be a man, 'Rastus.' I would not be afraid of the women if I were in your place."

"You don't know what you're talking about," said Mr. Bangs, shaking his head dolefully. "You are a woman, and can't be expected to know."

"Well, come down and let me introduce you now," said Selina, and she finally got him to consent.

"I feel like a lamb, being led to the slaughter," said poor Mr. Bangs, as he paused at the parlor door to wipe his face. "I wish I were home again, Selina."

"Don't be such a fool, 'Rastus,'" repeated his sister, by way of encouragement, and then he was dragged over the threshold, and he remembered afterward that something in the shape of a woman rose up, and said something, after Selina had said something. But what those somethings were, he never knew.

When he came to, sufficiently to realize what was going on about him, he was alone with the widow. She wasn't a bad-looking woman, he had to admit; in fact, he rather liked her looks.

Well, the result was, he fell in love with Mrs. Smith. He generally fell in love with the women Selina selected as proper subjects for matrimony. But this time he felt so completely done for that he was sure all his capabilities for falling in love were exhausted. He would never love again.

At the end of a week he felt that his love had reached the climax, for he picked up a rose she had dropped and slept with it under his pillow.

"You poor old fool," he said to himself the next morning, as he stood before the glass. "To think you've got spooony enough for that. I'm glad no one knows it. But the widow is very attractive, and I don't see as I'm to blame. I— I can't help it."

One day Selina and Mrs. Smith went out shopping after tea. As Mr. Bangs was going through the hall he saw that Mrs. Smith's room door stood partly open, and an irresistible impulse to take just one peep into it came over him. He did so. Hanging over the back of a chair was a walking skirt, and that mysterious article of feminine apparel fascinated him so much that he ventured in, and began to examine it.

"Well, now, if that doesn't beat the Dutch!" said Mr. Bangs, holding it up. "I wonder how I'd look in such a thing? I'm going to try it on."

"Accordingly he got hold of the belt, and proceeded to invest himself in it, after the manner of putting on trousers.

"It buckles, I s'pose," he said, pulling the belt together. "Yes, there it is. Lord! wouldn't I cut a fine figure in skirts," and Mr. Bangs danced a hornpipe to the accompaniment of a swishing skirt.

The hall door banged.

"Good gracious!" cried poor Bangs. "They've come home!"

Every hair on his head stood up with fright. He grabbed at the belt, but it wouldn't unbuckle. He heard steps on the stairs, and women's voices struck more terror to his guilty soul than the sound of Gabriel's trumpet would have done.

He glanced about him. There was no escape. A closet door stood partly open. Into that he crowded himself, and pulled the door together just as Mrs. Smith came in.

He could hear her bustling about, taking off her jacket and bonnet. What if she were to come to the closet? It was altogether likely that she lung her things there. He felt as if he were going to faint. Then he thought of the ridiculous appearance a fainting man in a skirt would make, and made up his mind that he wouldn't faint—he'd die first!

There! She was coming that way! What was to be done? A thousand wild thoughts flashed through his brain. He felt her hand upon the doorknob.

"There's a man in your room!" he roared out, in awful bass. He didn't know how he came to say it. It was the inspiration of desperation probably.

"Oh, o-h!" shrieked Mrs. Smith, and fled in terror.

"I've got to get out of this before anyone comes," said Mr. Bangs, giving a push to the door. Horrors! it would not open. There was only one way of opening it and that was from the outside.

A clammy perspiration covered him from head to foot.

"You stay here, and I'll go in," he heard Selina say, in the hall. "I ain't afraid."

He put his eye to the keyhole, and saw his sister enter the room.

"Selina!" he called, in a sepulchral tone. "Selina!"

"Who calls me Selina?" demanded Mrs. Green, dramatically, flourishing the feather duster, which she had brought along for a weapon of defense.

"I do," answered Mr. Bangs. "It's 'Rastus, your brother. I'm shut up in this closet."

"Well, I never!" exclaimed Mrs. Green, staring at the closet as if she expected to look it out of countenance.

"Let me out, and don't be a fool!" cried Mr. Bangs.

Thus appealed to, Mrs. Green ventured to open the door, and out stepped Mr. Bangs with his skirt swishing about his legs.

"For the land's sake!" cried Selina, with uplifted hands and mouth wide open. "Why, 'Rastus Bangs!"

"I thought I'd have a little sport," explained Mr. Bangs, looking about as foolish as it is possible for a man to, "but you came back too soon, and I couldn't get it off and slipped into the closet. Help me out of the confounded thing, Selina, and keep it to yourself, and I'll buy you the nicest dress in town."

"Selina! Selina!" called the widow from the bottom of the stairs. "Do you want any help?"

"Hurry up!" exclaimed Mr. Bangs. "She'll be here in a minute."

"I'll tell you what I'll do," said Selina. "If you'll promise to ask her to marry you inside of three days, I'll help you out of the scrape. If you don't, I'll call her in."

"I-I dassent," groaned Mr. Bangs.

"Then I'll call her," said Selina.

"I—I will!" said her brother, desperately.

Mrs. Green gave a peculiar twitch to the strap, the buckle let go its hold, and the skirt fell to the floor. Mr. Bangs stood up a free man.

"Now, remember," said Selina, warningly, "if you haven't proposed to Mrs. Smith in three days from this time—at half-past six precisely, on Thursday, the time'll be up—I shall tell the whole story."

Oh, those three days! They seemed three years to poor Bangs. He tried seven different times to make his promise good, but every time his tongue clove to the roof of his mouth, and he was speechless.

Thursday, at six o'clock, Selina came to him.

"Have you asked her, 'Rastus?'" she demanded, solemnly.

"No, I haven't," answered Mr. Bangs. "I can't, Selina."

"You've got just half an hour's time left," said Selina, unfeelingly. "Supper'll be ready in 15 minutes. The half hour'll be gone before we get through eating, and I shall tell the story the minute the time's up. Maria's in the parlor, alone. If you want to see her, you'll never get a better chance."

"If you had any sisterly regard for me—" began Mr. Bangs, but Mrs. Green cut him short with the remark:

"A bargain's a bargain. Do as you agreed to, or I will. Don't be a fool, 'Rastus."

And with that she opened the parlor door, and pushed him in. Mr. Bangs doesn't know what he said; he never knew. But the widow said he asked her if she wanted to marry him. Being a truthful woman, she said she did, and so the poor man was spared the recital of his terrible fix.

"It was lucky that it happened, after all," he told Selina, "for if it hadn't, I never would have got courage to propose—never." —Eben E. Rexford, in N. Y. Weekly.

THE FUTILITY OF LANGUAGE

Magazine Writer Has Peculiar Ideas About Conversation—Compares Man and Engine.

The steam engine (when one thinks of it) really expresses itself as well as the rest of us, says Gerald Stanley Lee, in Reader Magazine. All language is irrelevant, feeble and absurd. We live in an organically inexpressible world. The language of everything in it is absurd. Judged merely by its outer signs, the universe over our heads—with its cunning little stars in it—is the height of absurdity, as a self-expression. The sky laughs at us. We know it when we look in a telescope. Time and space are God's jokes. Looked at strictly in its outer language, the whole visible world is a joke. To suppose that God has ever expressed Himself to us in it, or to suppose that he could express Himself to us in it, or that anyone can express anything in it, is not to see the point of the joke.

We cannot even express ourselves to one another. The language of everything we use or touch is absurd. Nearly all of the tools we do our living with—even the things that human beings amuse themselves with—are inexpressive and foolish-looking. Golf and tennis and football have all been accused in turn, by people who do not know them from the inside, of being meaningless. A golf stick does not convey anything to the uninitiated, but the bare sight of a golf stick lying on a seat is a feeling to the one to whom it belongs, a play of sense and spirit to him, a subtle thrill in his arms. The same is true of a new fiery red baby, which, considering the fuss that is made about it, to a comparative outsider, like a small boy, has always been from the beginning of the world a ridiculous and inadequate object. A man could not possibly imagine, even if he gave all his time to it, a more futile, reckless, hapless expression of or pointer to an immortal soul than a week-old baby wailing at time and space. The idea of a baby may be all right, but in its outer form, at least, a baby is a failure, and always has been.

Some Living.

If it may be true that the good die young, but there are few of our older inhabitants that are willing to admit it.

Y. W. C. A. IN GERMANY.

Its Object Varies Greatly from That of the Similar Associations in America.

How slowly and with what patience the German women have had to work in order to introduce any new thing into their country is shown by the history of the founding of the Young Woman's Christian association which celebrated its first anniversary recently. Ten years ago the founder of the German association, Countess Elizabeth von Waldersee, a niece of the late Field Marshal von Waldersee, wrote an article to a religious paper in this country, in which she set forth the need of such an organization. But it was only after years of work that it was finally started in Germany.

The German Young Women's Christian association was founded with the specific purpose of encouraging Bible study among the young girls and women of the educated classes, and is the only organization which aims to meet the needs of the young women of the better classes. Other jungfrauenvereine there are in considerable numbers, but their purpose is quite different. Sunday associations, under the patronage of the kaiserin, gather together girls of the working classes on Sunday evenings for social purposes. The International Girls' Friendly society looks after the governesses and children's nurses, and a new organization for the care of young women takes charge of girls coming to the city for employment.

But educated girls seem hitherto to have been forgotten. The Young Woman's Christian association, however, fills the want. It occupies pleasant rooms in a central part of the city, but in a private street, although within a minute's walk of one of Berlin's most crowded thoroughfares. It gives courses in Bible study, lectures and preparation for foreign mission work. A few years ago there was not one German woman in the foreign missionary field; now there are several. Then there are singing lessons and courses in gymnastics.

Owing to the geographical position of Germany it has been considered best to make the association as international in character as possible. There are a number of Scandinavian members, who have lectures in their own languages. The English and French are encouraged to attend, and Countess von Waldersee and her associates are looking forward to the next year with great hope of being able to enlarge the quarters and to furnish a few rooms for the accommodation of traveling members.

LOVELY CIRCUS LADIES.

Illustration of Their Appearance in Everyday Life and Preparation for Performance.

It was such a pleasure to see these women at close range, and have a glimpse of their daily life, says Pilgrim Magazine. Three or four were clustered about a trunk that had a beautiful silver samovar on the closed lid, and they were enjoying the fragrant tea and chatting quite as much as if they were in a drawing room. One pretty brunette sat before an open trunk mending a dainty corset cover, while the stately blonde at the next trunk was getting into a most exquisitely tailored riding suit and a real skirt. One did not have to be told the garments were made in Paris. They showed it to even a novice. Close at hand two ladies were having a comfortable chat over their embroidery, which was progressing rapidly under their skillful fingers. At the further end of the room three sisters wrapped in Japanese kimonos were getting into brilliant red tights as modestly as if they had never before dressed with anyone near. One petite blonde was singing a gay little French song as she arranged her hair, with never a glance into the little hand mirror to see if her curls were properly disposed.

Prince Collects Beetles.

Among the illustrious personages with queer fads must be numbered Prince Luitpold of Bavaria. His collection of beetles is the most extensive and complete in the world, and the prince is a skilled entomologist, deeply versed in the habits of ants, bees, moths, flies, earwigs and the insect world generally.

ALL WONDERFUL TO HER.

Bride Hears of Wonders of Pike's Peak and Comments on Lessons in Traveling.

A tourist who sat behind a bridal couple on the Pike's Peak railway last summer says, in Lippincott's, that he overheard the bridegroom giving the bride information regarding the difficulties that had been overcome in constructing some of the Rocky mountain railroads.

"Do you know, dear," he said, "that the grade of the road we are riding over is more than 13,000 feet to the mile?"

"How wonderful!" she said, languidly.

"Yes, and there is a line of road in this state where there is what they call the 'loop,' and they say that when a long train of cars is going over it they have to run very slow to keep the cowcatcher from shoving the last car of the train off the track, for it is right in front of the engine."

"How wonderful!"

"Isn't it, though? And there is one place where if you drop a stone from the car window it will fall in a straight line 19,000 feet before it strikes anything."

"How wonderful!"

"Yes, and they say that the velocity of the wind on Pike's Peak sometimes reaches 46,000 miles an hour."

"Just think! Isn't it wonderful?"

"And the ties and rails for some of these Rocky mountain railroads had to be brought away up here on the tops of the mountains on the backs of some of those little burros we saw down below."

"How remarkable! And how sweet of you, dear, to bring me out here where such remarkable things have happened. It's ever so educational and awfully interesting. You are sure we will get down all right, dear?"

"Oh, yes, there's no danger. They say they never had but one accident on this road, and that was a mighty curious one. They had a big mountain landslide once, and a section of track a quarter of a mile long with a passenger train on it slid half a mile right down the side of the mountain, and the train never left the track and not a person was hurt."

"How wonderful! And how jolly to have been in an accident of that kind. It would be something to remember all one's life. What a lot one can learn by traveling!"

JOHNNY DECIDED TO LET GO

Amusing Incident of a Trip of President Roosevelt's in the Adirondacks.

President Roosevelt, on one of his hunting tours in the Adirondacks spent a very long day in restless pursuit of big game, relates success. By the time success had finally justified the chase, he made the discovery that he was a very hungry man. At his urgent request the guide conducted the party to the nearest inn in the wilderness afforded. The journey was not a brief one, and, by the time the modest hostelry was reached, Mr. Roosevelt was still more hungry.

When informed that the only fare obtainable at the establishment was corned beef and cabbage, involuntarily he made use of the expression which has long been famous:

"Delighted!"

Amusement was created in the presidential party when the chief executive, whose identity had been kept a secret, was given a seat at the family board. It was increased when huge portions of corned beef and cabbage were passed from the head of the table where the host sat. The first plate to make its appearance was heaped very high. It reached a small boy and got no further. The president sighed to express his envy and disappointment.

"Johnny!" exclaimed the host, sharply, "thet ben't fer you; thet be fer the stranger?"

Much to the amusement of all, the president seized the rim of the plate on one side while Johnny held the other.

There was a moment of doubt. Then the president, softly, and with a twinkle in his eye, but with inexorable decision, leaned over and spoke into the red, resentful face of the hungry boy:

"Johnny," he said, "let go!"

Johnny let go.

LANDLORD MUST CONSENT.

Farmer Tenants in Germany Cannot Marry Except with Freewill of Farm Owner.

In Germany a farmer cannot marry without the consent of his landlord, and this consent is not always easy to obtain. Very often a farmer has to purchase his landlord's consent to his marriage, and many of the poorer land owners add a good deal to their incomes in this manner.

Numbers of the large German territorial magnates can compel their tenants to work for them in a number of different ways. On several estates in Germany the tenants who are tradespeople have to give their services to the landlord for nothing whenever he may require them to do so.

In Spain these peculiar privileges of the landed classes are confined altogether to the nobility. A man without a title in Spain, should he be in the position of a landlord, which is very rarely the case, has practically no control over his tenants, and very often finds it hard even to recover his rent.

But the Spanish nobles are endowed with immense territorial powers.

Among the peculiar privileges possessed by the Spanish nobility is that of being empowered to try tenants for any criminal offense which they may commit, with the exception of murder. A Spanish nobleman, however, cannot inflict a longer term of imprisonment on any of his tenants than two years without having the sentence confirmed by the Spanish government, before whom must be laid all the particulars of the case and the nature of the evidence against the prisoner. If the sentence appears to be unjust or unduly severe, the government can order the prisoner to be tried in the ordinary manner before a judge and jury.

In France there are very few territorial proprietors, most of the peasants being owners of their farms; such landlords, however, as do exist have very little control over their tenants beyond receiving their rent, which must not exceed a certain standard fixed by the state.

There are no tenantry in the world so completely in the power of their landlord as the Russian peasants. The Russian peasant has no legal existence, for he belongs to his landlord, who, if he wishes, can flog him to death for the least offense. The Russian farmer pays no rent. All the profits of the farm must go to the landlord, who provides his tenants with just the bare necessities of life.

SOME FACTS ABOUT TIME.

There Are Many Ideas Regarding It, But Its Forefinger Writes in Great Wrinkles.

Time is hard to define, says the Newark News. According to the best poets time has a heavy foot, a tooth, a forelock and breakable legs. It travels in divers places; it ambles, trots, gallops, runs, rolls and stands still; it has whips; it crops roses. So far it seems like a horse. But it has a forefinger, also reckless hand that writes wrinkles. This explodes the horse theory. Furthermore, time flies. Hence, "a bird of time." Time is money; being also a bird, time is a gold eagle, perhaps; money is the root of all evil, and procrastination is the thief of time. Therefore procrastination is (1) a chicken thief, (2) a good thing.

The wickedness of time is beyond question. It is vindictive. "I wasted time," mourns King Richard, "and now doth time waste me." Time waits for no man. Time shall throw a dart at thee. Time robs us of our joys. Time will tell. Time is unthinking. Time possesses its debtors. The time is cut of joint, and well may it be, considering what a nuisance it is.

Time is a sea, a sandy beach, a bank, a shoal and an abyss. Also it is a whirligig, which seems odd when we recall that time is quiet as a nun. Time is good, bad, high, fine, rough, hot, Christmas, spring, waltz, common and lovely. Among good times may be mentioned quitting time and dinner time.

COAL ONCE USED AS MONEY

Many Years Ago in England This Practice Was in Vogue, According to a Writer.

Coal was once used as money, but it was a long time ago and in England. The coal money was in the shape of disks, approximating coins in size, and was from Roman workshops, where articles of ornament were made on lathes. A writer says: "On the Dorset coast, in the isle of Purbeck, to the west of St. Alban's Head, an outcrop occurs of bituminous shale, which extends more or less for some miles. As a source of fuel this shale, or coal, has been worked from very early times and is to the present day used by the cottagers of Kimmeridge. Some of this shale is so compact a texture that it is capable of being worked into ornamental articles, taking a high polish, similar to jet. The Romans, when occupying this part of Dorset, discovered not only the properties of this deposit as a fuel, but also its capabilities of being turned in a lathe into rings, beads and armlets, which were no doubt readily purchased by the ladies in the important town of Durnovaria (Dorchester), a few miles distant. Some estimate may be formed of the magnitude of this industry by the number of disks which have been discovered from time to time in the neighborhood, as they are without doubt the cores or centers left after turning articles of ornament.

"These discarded disks have been invariably found, carefully hidden away under the surface of the ground, at a depth of about two feet, sometimes with or in Roman pottery and sometimes between two flat stones placed on edge, covered with a third stone at the top. That they were carefully stored and hidden away is beyond question; hence they must have represented some value to the possessor. It would appear reasonable to conclude that they were used by the ancient Britons as tallies, or money. The turning lathe of the enlightened Roman was an instrument unknown to the natives and these waste disks, bearing the tool marks of the turner, would have been as impossible to counterfeit by the savage Briton as a minted coin.

"That they have been known from early times as coal money is well authenticated. As many as 600 have been found together in one place, but always protected by covering stones or pottery. In size they vary from one and three-quarters to two and one-half inches in diameter and about one-half inch in thickness, with holes to secure them to the mandrel of the lathe. They are all strikingly similar in appearance."

Appendicitis Theory.

The organisms present in a diseased appendix have been discovered by a London physician in defective teeth. He therefore argues that appendicitis may be caused by bad teeth. The doctor does not think, however, that modern teeth are as bad as ordinarily supposed. Egyptian and Roman remains indicate, he says, that a larger proportion of diseased teeth existed at that time than at the present day. He recommends the use of cod liver oil to promote the growth of teeth in children, and also suggests a toothbrush drill in schools.

Too Smart.

Amelia—What did my father say?

Reginald—He showed me the door.

"And what did you say?" "I said it was certainly a very handsome door, but it was not what I had come to talk about. That made him laugh, and a minute later you were mine."—Cassell's.

They Agreed.

"Gentlemen," said the parliamentary candidate, "you charge me with having turned my coat. Years ago I supported this measure. Then I had a reason. But now, gentlemen, I have lost my reason."

And he wondered at the deafening applause that greeted this statement.—Cassell's.

MR. CARNEGIE'S DRAGON.

Bones of Huge Dinosaur Presented to London Museum Discussed.

Dr. Andrew Wilson speaks of that huge extinct reptile, the diplodocus, whose bones Andrew Carnegie presented to the South Kensington museum in London, as a "dragon." "If we could imagine it restored," says Dr. Wilson, "we should be tempted to imagine that the dragon legends of old had some foundation in fact. As a rule, these creatures—dinosaurs as they are called—were huge, bulky animals. Mr. Carnegie's specimen has been estimated to have possessed a length in life of about 70 feet. The diplodocus, with regard to its personal characteristics, appears to have possessed a head of very moderate size indeed, considered relatively to the animal's bulk. Its jaws are weak, and its teeth are borne by the front of the jaws only. That it fed on soft vegetable matter would therefore appear to be an inference fairly warranted by the facts; yet, like the vegetarian elephant, it may have been capable of fierce onslaughts enough in its day. To feed on plants is not always commensurate with mildness of temper, as every vicious horse testifies. We may further believe that the diplodocus, if not a swimmer, at least had aquatic habits.

"The long neck strikes one as peculiar. For what kind of life or habit did this possession fit the animal? Possibly, as in the case of a sea lizard, the plesiosaurus, the long neck, served to enable it to scan affairs around it, as it lay concealing its huge frame among the reeds and vegetation of shores and river banks. Then there is the long and powerful tail, the sweep of which must have been of tremendous extent. In this latter possession the dragon may have found an adequate means of defense.

"Its head is small; and though brain size does not bear a definite relation to brain qualities, nevertheless one may assume that these animals, as became reptilian habits at large, were slow of movement. Some of the neighbors of the diplodocus had the skin provided with spines and plates of bone."

SEAWEED IS USED AS FOOD

Cultivation of Salt-Water Vegetables Is Industry Which in Time Will Prove Profitable.

The cultivation of salt water vegetables is an industry that promises large profits for marine farmers of the future in this country, says the Philadelphia Record. Little Japan raises and gathers about $2,000,000 of them annually, and the United States fishing bureau urges that we ought to do at least as well, inasmuch as the same kinds grow wild in the shallow waters along our own coasts. People see them constantly, but pay no special attention, calling them weeds, because they are not acquainted with their value as table delicacies and have no knowledge of the proper methods of preparing them.

Some of these plants make excellent table vegetables; others are useful for salads, yet others are good for making jellies, and others still are valuable as condiments. The Japanese have developed their possibilities to a remarkable extent, and Dr. H. M. Smith, of the fisheries bureau, made quite a study of the subject during a recent visit to the mikado's empire. He says that Americans have good reasons to be ashamed of themselves, because, with resources of seaweeds fully equal and probably superior to those of Japan, they utilize only $35,000 worth of them per annum, the crop gathered being only one species, Irish moss, the business of collecting which is restricted to Massachusetts.

City's Wonderful Growth.

Chicago did not get a place on the map until 1840, when its population was 4,470. To-day it is the fourth city in the world in point of population and wealth. The only cities which lead it are London, New York and Paris.

COLOR OF OLD GLASS.

Different Causes Which Will Bring on This Change in Substance—Radium Produces Effect.

In many old buildings one sees window panes which have turned pale amethyst color. Manganese is added to the glass to neutralize the green color, which is caused by the presence of ferrous iron, and in the course of time this manganese changes from the colorless state, and turning violet gives its hue to the old glass, says Collier's. It has been observed that radium will cause this change in glass when its rays are allowed to act for only a short time. The suggestion has been made that the turning of glass under ordinary circumstances is due to the action of minute quantities of radio-active minerals which are at present in many localities.

Sir William Crookes has been making a study of these phenomena and concludes that the change in glass is not due to radium. The sun's rays possess all the powers of radium rays only in a vastly smaller degree. He believes that the long-continued action of the sunlight is the cause of the change noticed in the color of glass. It was shown some years ago that some of the sun's rays are prevented from reaching the earth by the blanket of the earth's atmosphere, and these rays which are taken away are the ones most active in effecting such changes as the one in glass. A striking confirmation of this is afforded by the fact that the most rapid coloring has been observed at high elevations in tropical regions. Here the layer of the atmosphere is thinner and the sun's rays more powerful. Some especially deeply colored specimens of glass have been found in South America in the region of the Andes.

AUTOS ON TEXAS RANCHES

Machines Have Brought Distant Points Into Close Touch with Civilization.

"I have just returned from a tour of the great ranching region of western Texas," said the salesman to the Houston Post reporter, "and as it is my custom to make that belt at least twice every year it comes easy for me to note progress."

"No man who has visited it in recent months can even surmise the great change worked by the automobile. Why, the latter has now brought points more than 100 miles distant from the railways into the closest possible touch with civilization. What used to be days of travel between distant ranches and railway stations is now merely a matter of a few hours."

"Nearly all the ranchmen own their own automobiles, and you can see them skimming the broad prairie in every direction, at times frightening the jack-rabbits and the coyotes and striking consternation to the hearts of hoot owls and the rattlesnakes.

"With the passing of the cowboy has almost come the passing of the cow pony, too, for on several big ranches I actually saw men rounding up the herds in an automobile. For most part he country in the great ranching region of Texas is level or slightly rolling, making the finest place in the world for the automobile. All along the Southern Pacific to the west and the Texas and Pacific and Fort Worth and Denver railroads dozens of automobiles are to be seen from car windows standing at stations where the buggy and the ranch wagon used to be."

No Wonder.

Gray—Terrible storm we had last evening, wasn't it? Thundered loud enough to wake the dead.

Smith—So? I didn't hear it.

Dying Like Gentlemen.

The Japanese made preparations for another great attack. They tubbed and put on clean clothes, furbished up their aims and accoutrements, so that, as they said: "We Japanese, who fight like gentlemen, if we die, we desire to be found like gentlemen upon the field."—Empire of the East.

A GLIMPSE OF THE MIKADO

London Artist Tells of Visit to Japan's Emperor—Is a Striking Character.

Edward Tennyson Reed, the London Punch caricaturist, is the only son of Sir Edward James Reed, the designer of war vessels for many foreign nations. The artist tells of a visit with his father to the imperial palace of Tokio. "After a short wait in the anteroom, toying with some extremely uninviting powdery sweetmeats, we were ushered into the 'presence.' We had to wend our way through long, winding passages, the mikado being always in full view of us; and at intervals we had to halt, take our bearings, and make grave obeisance in his direction.

"The emperor was a striking figure, heavy, rather sad-faced, with full lips, lowering brows and blue-black hair, which grew in the form of long, thin wisps, hanging down in front of his ears. These wisps flew out when he moved his head quickly, and you can imagine what a shock it was to see daylight between his majesty and his whiskers. He wore a military tunic of his own design, heavily brocaded with chrysanthemums, gold epaulets, many decorations, and white trousers on the extensible concertina model, so long that they were crushed into many transverse folds.

"His speech, which he read anxiously from a paper secreted in his wide-plumed cocked hat, was most kindly gracious and hospitable. In it the emperor promised my father very exceptional treatment throughout the country, a promise amply fulfilled, and spoke very highly of the battleships and cruisers my father had designed for the Japanese navy, then only breaking bud, but which has now broken the power of Russia."

CAN LIVE WITH NO STOMACH

Achievements of Modern Surgery Make This Miracle Possible—Other Scientific Wonders.

Modern surgery's great achievements have been in the abdominal region, for a generation ago fear of blood poisoning kept the surgeon out of this territory. Here disease entrenched itself and bid the surgeon defiance. But now the surgeon intrepidly enters disease's former stronghold, routs it, and in so doing performs life-saving feats with the organs that seem absolute miracles to the on-looking world, says Leslie's Magazine. Take the stomach. If it is too large, the surgeon enfolds a portion of the wall and sutures the edges, and if necessary, cuts a new opening for the head of the small intestine and sutures (stitches) it into place; if the esophagus is obstructed so that food cannot be taken naturally, a tube is inserted through the abdominal wall into the stomach, and when the man is hungry he merely drops a pre-masticated meal into the tube, or, in case a cancerous area be so large as to demand such a severe operation, the surgeon may remove the entire stomach and suture the esophagus to the duodenum. "Contrast this last operation with the working principle of the seventies, that to enter the stomach is death, and you see how far surgery has traveled in a generation. This last operation is, of course, rarely performed even now, but there are to-day a few stomachless persons in the world (one returned to work within two months after the operation), attending to their regular duties, taking a special diet, and apparently just as happy as though their stomachs were not in jars on laboratory shelves.

Let There be Peace.

It will be glad news to all nations if the conference at Portsmouth can agree on peace.

War is an awful thing especially with Japan and Russia two nations that care little for human life and suffering in a fierce and cruel war like the one that is now raging between them at present.

For humanity's sake peace would be welcome news the world over.

Not one foot of territory and not one Kopeck, will Russia give in order to make peace with Japan, this of course gives a black eye to all peace negotiations unless Japan comes down from her high claim for contribution.

A Warning to Mothers.

Too much care cannot be used with small children during the hot weather of the summer months to guard against bowel troubles. As a rule it is only necessary to give the child a dose of castor oil to correct any disorder of the bowels. Do not use any substitute, but give the old-fashioned castor oil, and see that it is fresh, as rancid oil nauseates and has a tendency to gripe. If this does not check the bowels give Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy and then a dose of castor oil, and the disease may be checked in its incipency and all danger avoided. The castor oil and this remedy should be procured at once and kept ready for instant use as soon as the first indication of any bowel trouble appears. This is the most successful treatment known and may be relied upon with implicit confidence even in cases of cholera infantum. For sale by Leon Evans.
