The Wings of the Morning

By BENJAMIN GRANVILLE

THE MOTHER-ROD OF THE GENTRY

She came and found her hand and pressed it lovingly, then she turned away from him, her eyes became misty with some deep unspoken sorrow, and she spoke in an almost inaudible voice:

"Why did you"—she began. "Why did you not answer my message?"

He was surprised, almost startled, at the tone of her voice. He had expected her to be angry and reproving, but the sorrow in her tone was unexpected, and he felt a momentary qualm of conscience.

"I wrote you not to answer me," he said, "for I knew you would not, and I did not wish you to know that I had written you."

"You thought me angry," she said, "or did you think me indifferent?"

He could not answer her, for he could not explain the reasons that had governed him. He had been afraid of her, afraid of her severity and pitiless justice.

"You must go," she said, "and I must go."

He knew she was right, and he knew he must go, but he did not want to go. He loved her, and he knew he would miss her, and he did not want to leave her. But he knew he must.

"You will come back," she said, "and you will bring me news of the house."

He promised to do so, and he promised to write her, and she promised to wait for him. And so they parted, and she went down the steps and away, and he stood among the dead leaves and the fallen snow, and he thought of her and of the house, and he wondered what would happen to it, and he wondered how long he would be away, and he wondered what he would do when he came back.

"I will write to you," he said, "and I will tell you what I see and what I do."

"I will write to you," she said, "and I will tell you what I see and what I do."

And so, as the snow fell softly and the wind moaned low, they parted, and each went his way, and each was left to face the storm alone.
Our trimmer, Miss Schroeder, comes to us direct from Chicago, where she has trimmed in the swelllest parlors of the city. She brings to us fresh, new ideas, and that brisk, businesslike way of doing business peculiar only to the Windy City. We sent Miss Schroeder to New York to spend the month of August. Her previous experience in Chicago gained for her in New York a distinction enjoyed only by the finest milliners. The manager of Castle & Co., the finest pattern makers in America, knew of Miss Schroeder's work at Gage Bros in Chicago and immediately sent for her on her arrival in New York and requested her to spend as much of her time as possible in their finest workrooms. This mark of favor shown Miss Schroeder by Castle & Co., led Madam Reynolds, forelady in Johnson's finest pattern parlor, to allow her to spend ten days in making patterns for this swelllest of all New York millinery parlors. All the Paris models are in this room and the prices range from $25 to $50, nothing less. It's the Mecca to which all aspiring milliners turn—but only the best are admitted to this charmed circle. Miss Reynolds—an inspired genius—stands guard at the entrance and scores are rejected where one is accepted. To gain entrance here you must have a reputation behind you, must be quick and decisive in thought, and above all you must have within you that creative genius that is "like poetry, born, not made." Miss Schroeder spent a whole month in these fashion centers, not merely taking notes and jotting down memoranda, but in actually making the patterns that are to be the pace setters of fashion in America this fall.

Miss Schroeder's wonderful talent will be reinforced in the trimming room by the cleverness of three assistants, Misses Clayton Boales, Bettie Crenshaw and Ruby West. Miss Annie Cayce, with her untiring energy and matchless tact and taste in suggesting stylish and "wearable" hats will be assisted in the salesroom by Miss Southall.

Great as have been our achievements in the millinery fields, on next Tuesday you shall see them all outdone; more hats, finer hats, and most especially more hats of modest price has been the order in this fall's preparations. The most discriminating woman cannot fail to find a hat that will please her fancy and fit her pocketbook. Here are hats, beautiful, dashing, rakish, sober, sedate, artistic or individualistic; here are the new Peter Pan Hats, the smart Julia Bon Bon, the Derby-crown hat, trimmed with the newest Blondened Ostrich, the chic Torpedo turban and the gay Picture Hat, adorned with Ostrich and Vulture plumes, and the very newest of all, Satin Hats. Buying millinery direct from the factories, saving all jobbers discounts and profits, makes it easy for Miss Schroeder to turn out hats of real city style at a remarkably low price.

We Cordially Invite You To Our Opening,
