WE GET WHAT WE WANT

ANYBODY with average intelligence knows Americans get what they want. Also that democratic governments, whether they be federal or municipal, do the same.

If we want the kind of schools our children need we would have them, not ten years from now but next September, even if it meant doubling the salary of every teacher in the school system.

If we wanted modern highways we would not build them piece-meal over a twenty-year period as we are doing. We would build them now and it would take a maximum of two years.

Anybody who doubts that should make some comparisons. We wanted television, so we developed it in twelve months, and in less than twelve years we had a television set in four homes out of five in America. Actually more homes are without telephones than television sets.

We wanted to develop aircraft, so we set about doing it long before modern roads were built. Now we may fly to the moon before we can get to New York in an automobile over a modern highway.

Anybody with an idea on how to kill more people, or to destroy more property in case of war, has a green light and the federal government places no limit on the investments required, but men and women engaged in the healing arts, and corporations whose existence depends upon investing hundreds of millions in research to develop drugs and chemicals to save human life, or to prolong our lives and usefulness, find it increasingly difficult to carry on their profession and to accumulate sufficient reserves to make expansions and increase their service to the public.

We believe the time has come for citizens to take over their governments and get what they actually want for the ever-increasing taxes they are paying.

George Romney, president of American Motors, who is seriously considering making the race for Governor of Michigan this summer, said on a television program Sunday that the United States is ruled by a much smaller minority than the Communist regime that rules Russia, due almost solely to lack of interest by citizens.

Also that it makes little, or no, difference which political party is in power the same selfish minority groups rule because they vote in blocs and either party must have the support of these groups to win.

We seriously doubt that he could win an election in Michigan with the opposition of all his competitors in the automobile industry which he has manifestly earned, plus the active opposition of the AFL-CIO which has controlled politics and kept "Soapy" Williams in office until the treasury faced bankruptcy.

He thinks he can win because he finally did force Williams out after being chosen to head a non-partisan citizens group. If he can he will set an example to other citizens and demonstrate that democracy will eventually win because the people can and do get what they want under our system of government. Also that it is the only system that will work.

W. T. Isaac

W. T. Isaac Will Head Annual Drive

LEXINGTON, Ky. — W. T. Isaac, Danville civic and business leader, has been named state chairman for the 1962 Easter Seal Campaign, according to A. Clay Stewart, Lexington, president of the Kentucky Society for Crippled Children, which conducts the annual drive.

As state chairman, Isaac will provide leadership for volunteer workers in all 120 Kentucky counties who participate in the annual appeal. The campaign will be from March 22 through April 22.

In accepting the appointment, Isaac said, "It is with great pleasure that I accept the chairmanship of the 1962 Easter Seal Campaign. Helping physically handicapped boys and girls along the road to active, happy, more useful lives is a heart-warming experience. I feel sure that all Kentuckians will want to contribute as much as possible to this most worthwhile cause."

Money raised during the Easter Seal Campaign is used by the Kentucky Society for Crippled Children to provide needed services for children and some adults crippled by various diseases, deformity, accidents, birth injury, serious hearing problems and speech defects caused by hearing loss, Stewart said. Easter Seal funds last year benefited 4416 Kentuckians, 4210 of whom were children.

Easter Seal facilities owned and operated by the Society include the West Kentucky Center for Handicapped Children at Paducah and Camp Kysoe, Carrollton.

Long interested in crippled children, Isaac is a member of the Society's board of directors. He is president of Friendship House, Inc., and vice president of Brighteners Corporation, Danyelle. An immediate past district governor of Rotary International, he has also served as a member of the Board of Overseers of Central College. He is currently a member of the Governor's Safety Advisory Committee and the Kentucky Development Council.

Hefty Breakfast Is OK For Dieters

NEW YORK (AP) — Courageously trying to lose a pound or two? It demands diligence as well as a sound nutritional "backbone." At the base of the backbone is a good breakfast. It's one meal you never should miss, nutrition experts say. For a handy, hearty starter, try oatmeal. It's high in nutritive value and has only 110 calories in each two-thirds cup serving. One teaspoon of sugar and 4 to 8 ounces of skim milk will keep that hot cereal in the low-calorie class.

Sports Parade

By OSCAR FRALEY

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. (AP) — For race driver Lee Petty, who could have been dead a year ago, it's "sorta like playing poker" as he comes back to Daytona Beach for stock car racing's world series. "You don't know," said the handsome 47-year-old who almost put his foot through it last year, "whether you're holding a hand." What he could have said was whether he still had the relentless foot. Lee comes back as a mystery man, even to himself. Just a year ago, Lee, a 13-year veteran of stock car racing's Grand National circuit and its three-time champion, was flying around the final bend into the straightaway at Daytona's new banked speedway when the lights went out.

Remembers Seeing Wreck "I was doing about 150 miles an hour when I saw a wreck," remembers the man from Randleman, N.C. "The next thing I knew was that I woke up in a hospital." In the interim, between that thrill of the speed and the white-sheeted awakening, Petty went over the wall in a hurtling dive and a grinding of tortured metal. Struck from the rear by another car, he had smashed through the guard rail, flown through the air onto a road apron atop the steeply-banked turn, careened along the apron 350 feet and crashed to a road 30 feet below. It was inconceivable that anyone could have emerged alive from that airborne automobile. Petty barely did. He suffered a punctured lung, multiple fractures of the left chest, a fractured left thigh, fractured left collarbone and multiple internal injuries. For days he walked the thin icy line between life and death.

Hospitalized Four Months Lee, whose dog, Dick, had gone through the fence in the previous race but escaped with minor injuries, spent four months in a hospital. It was five months before he got back on his feet. But now he is reading two more Plymouths for himself and his son, Dick. "They'll run 165 to 170 miles an hour on the straightaway this year," he said, "and I look for a 160 mile per hour average to win this year. That's compared with the 152 mile per hour plus record of last year." Which means it will be a lot tougher this time around when they run the stock car 250-mile race Feb. 17 and the 300-miler on Feb. 18. "This truck," says Petty with a calculating look, "is just like electricity. It's all right if you handle it but there's no room for error." He knows, and the limp with which he walks is silent testimony.

Diamond Demand Continues To Rise

NEW YORK (AP) — World demand for diamonds, both gem and industrial grades, continued to rise in 1961 with sales of rough diamonds for the first nine months of the year reaching a record high of $194,095,079. The industry's Central Selling Organization in London reported that total sales for 1961 are expected to exceed the previously highest record set for one year, 1959, when sales amounted to $255,180,640. Sales in 1960 were $251,161,072. Gem diamonds account for about 65 per cent of the sales figure, with industrials making up the remainder. In carat weight, however, industrial diamonds make up about 80 per cent of the diamonds marketed each year.

The new size Dodge Dart has the most powerful standard six engine in the business. It develops 145 horsepower from 225 cubic inches. It takes a V8 in other cars priced near Dart to keep up with it. Even then most of them can't. Dead weight and useless overhang have been all but eliminated in the '62 Dart. What results is an amazing power-to-weight ratio that makes any Dart-6 act like an eight. A very quick eight at that! This same six got better than 23 miles to the gallon in last year's Mobilgas Economy Run.

Frankly, we don't think anybody but a pro can get this kind of mileage. But it does give you an idea of the engine's potential. Repeated tests in the new size Dart prove that it will deliver at least 5% better gas economy than last year. See the new size Dodge Dart. There's no better value on the market.

CHAPTER 11

SETTLED at a table at the Cloisters, Martin Whitfield looked across at Lee Folson. "You don't think I can transform Oakland into a reasonable facsimile of Sundown?" he asked.

"I suppose you can, if you don't get restless and bored before you finish."

"Restless? Bored? My dear girl, you don't know me," he assured her firmly.

"No, I really don't, do I?" Lee agreed.

Martin's eyes held hers for a long moment, and there was an absurd stirring in her heart. "But you will," he promised her, and turned to the waiter who was standing beside them, ready to take their order.

When they had been served their first course, Martin leaned toward her again. "I really meant that, Lee," he told her.

"That you're going to remodel Oakland?"

"That you're going to get to know me," he cut in firmly. "May I tell you why I bought Oakland?"

Martin hesitated while their first course was changed, the second came and the waiter removed himself.

"I'd made several trips around the world," he began. "I became curious about the places cruise ships didn't visit. I saw things that even now sicken me as I recall them. Then I came back to Rome and Paris and London, and the bitter contrast I saw there, the people who had so much they were bored to death with everything.

He broke off, his eyes apprehensive.

"Am I making any sort of sense?" he asked her humbly.

"Of course. A lot of sense. Please go on."

He nodded and resumed: "I stopped in Ireland to visit a friend who had bought one of the ruined castles there and was having a ball restoring it, bringing prosperity to the people of the little village at the foot of the crag on which the castle was built," he said. "He'd never been a man to interest himself in the affairs of people less fortunate than himself. But now he was employing as many men as he could, walking down to the village in the evenings to sit in the pub and make friends with everybody who came in. And he told me that the thing that was most important to him was that each morning when he got up, there was something to do; something that really mattered."

Lee had listened in growing amazement.

"So you thought you'd come here and befriend the underprivileged and downtrodden," she began sharply.

Martin stared at her as though thunderstruck.

"Is that what you really think?" he asked at last, and made a small, hopeless gesture. "Then I've failed miserably to make you understand and I'm sorry. Shall we just skip the whole thing?"

She saw that he was genuinely hurt, and instant compunction swept over her. She leaned forward and touched his hand with her own in a gesture of apology.

"I've misunderstood, Martin. I'm truly sorry."

"You're completely misunderstood, but I'm not too sure you will be any more kindly disposed when I tell you that my whole intention in this is purely selfish," he pointed out ruefully. "I'm not a bit concerned about befriending the underprivileged, as you call it. After what I've seen in other parts of the world, I consider people in and around Louisville among the most privileged of all people. No, my whole thought in buying and restoring Oakland is to give a point and a purpose to my own life! You see how selfish and self-centered I am."

Before she could answer, and while she was still turning his words over in her mind, he went on:

"When my friend in Ireland told me what fun it was to wake up every morning and have something to do that seemed to him important, I knew that was what I wanted. Can you imagine, Lee, anything more completely denuding than to awake each morning knowing only that there are so many hours to get through and nothing that you feel is really important to do? You have your work; I know it's important to you."

"You must wake up every morning knowing that you must get to the office; that there are things to be done. Well, that's what I want of Oakland. And if it takes ten years or twenty, so much the better. With a place like that to keep one occupied, every day will seem important and the time will not be long enough to do everything one wants to."

"My friend laughed one morning and said, 'Know what's the most fun about this place, Mart? The fact that you can stop outside, close your eyes, turn around twice, open your eyes, and be looking straight at a job that should have been done yesterday?' To me, the odd thing in that his wife is as excited about the castle as he is."

"Why should you find that odd?" Lee asked curiously.

"Because she is the last woman in the world who could believe would be contented living amid the clutter and debris that accompanies a restoration job," Martin admitted. "She's a woman of great wealth, brought up in the luxury that goes hand in hand with good taste. Now she runs around in slacks or battered jeans, usually has a dab of paint on her cheek, and is as bright-eyed and eager as a girl. And she told me herself that she is happier than she has ever been in her life. Her husband adores her, though before they started on this job, they were almost strangers."

Lee had listened with growing astonishment. Was this really the only mystery back of this very attractive man's arrival in Louisville?

"I suppose," he broke the silence after a moment, "you think all this sounds very half-baked. I mean, my restoring Oakland is going to do nothing for the poverty-ridden, starving people in those out-of-the-way places I visited. But there is so little one man, even with the wealth of Midas, could do for them individually. Perhaps, if I can make Oakland genuinely productive, I may contribute in a small way to the task of feeding the world. I'm afraid, with all that's going on all over the world, food is going to be a most precious commodity. Am I a fool, Lee?"

"Of course not," Lee assured him firmly, liking him more and more. "You're finding happiness in your own way. You'll be employing people in and around Louisville, and that will help them. And the merchants who sell you what you will need for the restoration will benefit."

Martin beamed at her.

"As I said before, Lee, I'm being selfish," he warned her. "I'm afraid I'm thinking a lot more about my own satisfaction in the job than I am about the benefits that may come to others. But I'll try to do what's best for Oakland and the people."

"I'm sure you will," Lee told him sincerely, and smiled. "I think you're very nice, Martin!" He looked indignantly pleased.

"And I think you're about the nicest person I've ever met," he told her warmly.

Americans Were Friendlier In '61

NEW YORK (UP) — People in the United States were friendlier than ever in 1961. They sent a record 6 billion greeting cards during the year — about half of them for Christmas.

This does not include the tremendous number of various other types of personalized greetings, including such things as homemade cards, floral wreaths, "living letters."

An estimated 3 million of the "living letters," tape-recorded greetings, were exchanged during the year. Most of these went out at Christmas, Valentine's Day and Mother's Day.

Sad Fact: Feet Getting Bigger

AKRON, Ohio (UP) — Miady's feet no longer are likely to fit into Cinderella's diminutive glass slipper.

The Goodyear Women's Service Bureau reports that feet are getting bigger and so are shoes. But shoe manufacturers have expended time and money to conceal artfully the fact that the famous 2A has grown into a 7B. So the bureau advises a "fit first" policy in selecting shoes, confident that whatever size they are will look just right.

It also advises women to play the barefoot Lucy on occasion to keep feet in good condition. Walking barefoot in sand or grass exercises the foot muscles. Wriggling the toes, stretching and bending the feet and rotating the ankles also are good hygiene.

CHAPTER 11

SETTLED at a table at the Cloisters, Martin Whitfield looked across at Lee Folson. "You don't think I can transform Oakland into a reasonable facsimile of Sundown?" he asked.

"I suppose you can, if you don't get restless and bored before you finish."

"Restless? Bored? My dear girl, you don't know me," he assured her firmly.

"No, I really don't, do I?" Lee agreed.

Martin's eyes held hers for a long moment, and there was an absurd stirring in her heart. "But you will," he promised her, and turned to the waiter who was standing beside them, ready to take their order.

When they had been served their first course, Martin leaned toward her again. "I really meant that, Lee," he told her.

"That you're going to remodel Oakland?"

"That you're going to get to know me," he cut in firmly. "May I tell you why I bought Oakland?"

Martin hesitated while their first course was changed, the second came and the waiter removed himself.

"I'd made several trips around the world," he began. "I became curious about the places cruise ships didn't visit. I saw things that even now sicken me as I recall them. Then I came back to Rome and Paris and London, and the bitter contrast I saw there, the people who had so much they were bored to death with everything.

He broke off, his eyes apprehensive.

"Am I making any sort of sense?" he asked her humbly.
