Hershey said the boards will be instructed to "take a good look at the fellow who marries some girl and forgets to stay around and provide a home — we're interested in him."

The general said that as soon as the pool of available single 18-to-29-year-olds is exhausted, the Selective Service will begin calling up married men in the same age bracket without children. He said this could be anytime after next January.

Hershey warned students that they will have to work at their schooling if they want to be deferred. He said that if students are called up, the first will be those whose grades are not up to par, those who are not carrying a full load of studies, and the fellows who get kicked out of school one year and go back the next.

The Almanac

by United Press International
Today is Tuesday, Aug. 31, the 243rd day of 1965 with 122 to follow.

The moon is approaching its first quarter.
The morning stars are Mercury, Jupiter and Saturn.
The evening stars are Venus, Mars and Saturn.

American writer William Saroyan was born on this day in 1908.

On this day in history:
In 1886, the first major earthquake recorded in the U.S. killed 41 persons at Charleston, S.C.

In 1887, Thomas Edison received a patent for a device which showed pictures of objects in motion.

In 1864, 68 persons were killed and property damage was estimated at $500 million as Hurricane Carol lashed the New England coast.

In 1956, Argentine President Juan Peron offered to resign to end political unrest in the country. Later he withdrew the offer.

A thought for the day - Winston Churchill said: "I cannot forecast to you the action of Russia. It is a riddle wrapped in a mystery inside an enigma."

SOCIAL SECURITY

Question: I am 21 years old and going to college. I understand that some students can receive social security benefits up to age 22. My father died when I was 19 years old so I never received payments as a child under age 18. Can I now become entitled?

Answer: If your father was insured you may qualify for student's benefits. Any child, who has not married, may now be eligible for social security benefits if he is going to school and is under age 22 even though he was over 18 when his father became entitled to social security benefits or died.

Question: I am only 17 years of age but will graduate from high school after I am 18. How do I apply to keep my benefits coming?

Answer: If you are now receiving social security and are not yet 18, the continuation of benefits will be almost automatic. You should contact the social security office three months before you are 18 to have your benefits continued. For those who are over 18 years of age or over the payment of student's benefits is not automatic; you or your parent must apply for these benefits. If your benefits were stopped because you reached age 18, you must reapply and show that you are now a full time student, unmarried, and under age 22.

Question: What do I have to do to get the raise in social security benefits I have been getting benefits for several years?

Answer: You don't have to do anything. The amount of your benefit will be increased by 7% with back payment of the increase being made for January 1965 and the following months.

A special check to be mailed in the latter part of September will cover back payments due for January through August. Your first regular monthly check at the new rate will be mailed to you early in October 1965 for the month of September. If your benefits have been temporarily stopped because you are working, you will receive any amount due to you, including the increase, after you make the annual report of your 1965 earnings.

Business Highlights

PITTSBURGH: Although a fairly wide gap still persists, men on both sides of the steel wage bargaining table believe there is basic agreement before a midnight Aug. 31 strike deadline is reached.

Steel labor and management were provided by the White House with a warning that a strike, possibly settlement is expected, and one that will neither favor steel prices up nor place a burden on the mills.

NEW YORK: Charges of violation of securities laws were filed by Paramount Pictures Corp. against one of its investment directors who was added to its board of directors last May in a move to avoid a proxy fight.

On Aug. 28, Paramount directors voted to oust the two trustees, Herbert J. Egan, chairman of Baldwin-Monroe Chemical Co. and Ernest H. Martin, a Broadway producer from the eight-man executive committee. Both sides have since released statements on that action.

The latest action, filed in federal court here, charged the two with "conflict of interest" and "harassment" of Paramount management and employees.

NEW YORK: Passenger business improved sharply for the first air-travel week. Eastern Airlines reported its first profitable July since 1962, while Pan American World Airways said its July profits were up more than 50 per cent.

NEW YORK: General Time Corp. announced receipt of a $3 million plus contract for production of an electronic metronome for use in the Apollo space-vehicle. The contract was awarded by North American Aviation Inc. Space and Information Systems Division.

WHAT'S GOING ON HERE

by Wendell P. Butler
Ky. Dept. of Agriculture
Frankfort

The State Board of Agriculture has adopted a new regulation concerning the posting of tobacco warehousing fees and commissions. Under this new regulation, which will go into effect this fall, all warehouses must print on weigh bills and pay sheets, a listing of all commissions, fees, discounts, and deductions charged or handled by the warehouse.

Some houses have been doing this in the past. However, starting this fall, all will be required to list these charges. Thus, a farmer will have a record on his weigh bill and pay sheet of just what the various fees and commissions were on his tobacco.

The regulation was recommended to the Board by the Smoker Auction Warehouse Association. Inspectors for the Division of Weights & Measure will enforce compliance with the regulation.

In relation to the above regulation, warehouses will also be required to post a listing of these fees, commissions, and deductions outside the scale houses and inside the office building scales. They must be displayed so that they are plainly visible to all patrons.

This too, will be supervised by the Division of Weights and Measures. This Division is also responsible for inspecting all tobacco warehouses, which will be done before sales open this fall. After each unit is inspected and passed, a sticker noting that is placed on the scales.

Along with the scale inspections, inspectors make regular checks during sales to see that proper bucket weight and height are being maintained, and that selling procedure are being observed.

Response to the Department's attempt to compile a master list of agricultural meetings, or those of interest to farm and agri-business people, has been good. The September issue of the "Kentucky Agricultural Bulletin" will carry a listing of the meetings scheduled for the next three months.

This calendar of events will list state-wide meetings or regional meetings that might draw people from throughout the State. Many times agricultural meetings, or those of a related nature, will expect attendance from the same group of people. Thus, it can become a problem for representatives of some we are to realize our full potential as a dairy center.

Although some areas have suffered from dry weather, Kentucky tobacco growers seem to be in for another good year. Estimates at this time show that this year's yield should be about 4,400,000 pounds higher than last year. The Crop and Livestock Reporting Service expects the average to be 2,325 pounds per acre, which would be about 300 pounds higher than last year.

Some other interesting figures on the farming picture in Kentucky show that commercial slaughtering plants produced 27,011,000 pounds of red meat during this past June. This represented a 14 per cent increase over last year. The increase, with pork showing the largest gain, was attributed to the greater number of animals being available for slaughter. The first six months of the year showed Kentucky farms handling 280,039,000 pounds of meat. This was a slight increase over the same period last year.

Farmers are urged to follow the curing reports from the U. S. Weather Bureau tobacco harvest. It can mean extra dollars.

However, past experience has proved that the primary goal of the advocates of government supply management is to build and stabilize a power empire. With this as an objective, the bureaucrats can in effect to lose the dictatorial control they possess as the dispensers of government paychecks under federal farm price fixing program.

It is the hope of these results it would seem that even the most dedicated government planners would concede that consideration should be given to a new approach in farm legislation recognizing the proper function of the market system in matching production to demand.

New York Mets Begin Search For New Manager Who Has Box Office Attraction, And Ability Too

By MARTIN LADER
UPI Sports Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — The New York Mets began their search for a successor to Casey Stengel today, faced with the perplexing problem of trying to replace the old man both on the field and as a box office attraction.

Among the names most prominently mentioned as candidates for the Mets' managerial position next season are Gil Hodges, Johnny Keane, Leo Durocher, Eddie Stanky, Yogi Berra and Paul Richards. All are well-known personalities in baseball and all are or have been associated with a New York team. Still, after the Mets finish scanning the list of applicants, they may very well find their next leader in the most obvious place of all — on their bench.

West, named interim manager when Stengel suffered a fractured left hip little more than a month ago, has made a noticeable impression on the Mets management.

The Mets players themselves cautioned that Westrum should not be written off.

Knows Club Well

"Who knows the club better?" one of them asked Monday.

There's a general feeling of satisfaction with the job Westrum has done, and Mets officials also realize that whomever they get will not rival Stengel in popularity, the way Casey himself gave Westrum a strong vote of confidence when he personally selected his coach to replace him as manager this season and added another favorable word Monday by lauding Westrum "for the splendid job he's doing."

Asked Monday why he didn't choose Berra, also a Mets coach, Casey applied his famed scowl and never really answered the question. However, Mets President George Weiss replied: "Westrum was Casey's right hand man. He was always at his side. He knew the way Casey wanted the ball club run."

The 75-year-old Stengel, carrying a shiny, black walking cane, announced his retirement as manager Monday afternoon, explaining that he was doing so "on medical advice."

Changes Made

"Before I got hurt, I didn't know I was gonna retire," Stengel said. "After my operation, I thought I was gonna start out of here in four weeks, but when I knew I couldn't make it, I had several talks with Dr. Pete La Motte the club physician and he told me all about the operation. But nobody put any pressure on me to do what I did."

"When I knew I couldn't make it, I called up Mr. Weiss. I told him I didn't care to run the ball club unless I could walk freely. I didn't want to delay the game."

Stengel, who lives in Glendale, Calif., did accept a two-year contract as vice-president in charge of the West Coast for the Mets. He'll scout players in that area, which led him to joke: "I'm probably the highest paid scout you ever heard of."

Casey, who has managed the Mets since their inception in 1962, fractured his left hip in the early morning of July 25 and underwent surgery two days later. He has made a remarkable recovery for a man his age but still felt that he wasn't able to continue in this position as manager.

Universities and colleges in Kentucky will receive more than $17 million in construction funds from the $175 million bond issue if it is approved by the voters November 2.

Twins Can Scratch For Runs As Well As Hit The Long Balls

By LEONARD A. GRANATO
UPI Sports Writer

The Minnesota Twins are feared for their long-ball hitters, but they can scratch and scuffle for runs when they have to.

The sluggers are Harmon Killebrew with 22 home runs, Bob Allison with 20, Jimmie Hall with 16, Dan Mincer with 17 and Zolo Versalles and Tony Oliva with 16 each.

But Monday night at Detroit, Hank Aguirre held the Twins' bats hitless for six innings. So the Twins found other ways to get runs—with singles and sacrifices—and beat the Tigers 3-2 in 11 innings.

In other American League action the New York Yankees beat the Los Angeles Angels 4-3 and Cleveland was rained out at Kansas City. No National League games were scheduled.

Scores Winning Run

Mincer opened the 11th with a single. He was sacrificed to second and scored the winning run on Sandy Valdespin's two-out single. Mincer had broken up Aguirre's potential no-hitter in the seventh with a single that scored Joe Niese, who had reached on an error.

The other Minnesota run came on a walk, a sacrifice and a single by Versalles in the seventh.

While Houston had three singles in four trips and drove in both De-

A Producer's Life Is Often Peripatetic

By BO MURPHY

THE BEST way in which Stuart Schulberg can describe his chores this present summer is to paraphrase the lyrics of George Gershwin's better known lyrics: "It may be summertime," he said wryly, "but the livin' definitely isn't easy for NBC Sports in Action."

The peripatetic producer, whose hour-long network show is seen each Sunday from 6:30 to 7:30 p.m., has been spreading his single crew all over Europe since the second week in June. During the process, at one time or another, there have been five or six shows in varying stages of production.

COUPLE this with the job of securing hotel and plane reservations at the height of the vacation season, and languages and customs problems. Toss in the task of guaranteeing jet-propelled delivery of tape and film to the U.S. to meet telecast deadlines. Then you realize why the whole setup has become known back in the NBC home office in New York as "Operation Schulberg." It is a feat in logistics that would have won praise from the toughest Marine Corps topkicker for ex-Martin Schulberg.

Since the 42-year-old producer and his staff began their European crash program about two months ago, they have been involved in the filming and taping of such diverse and widely-scattered events as the Henley Regatta, the Wimbledon Tennis Championship, the Ascot Gold Cup horse race, and the Eton Wall Game in England, the Belgian Grand Prix, the French Steeplechase, the Dutch Grand Prix, the Tour de France, a Portuguese bull fight, and the Budapest International Swimming Championships.

IN THE WEEKS ahead, the SIA crew will cover such events as hydroplane races in Lake Tahoe, Nev., parachuting championships in Phoenix, Ariz., the World's Roller Skating Championships in Madrid, Spain, and the International Spear-fishing Championships at a Pacific atoll 300 miles off Tahiti.

During his present stay in Europe, Schulberg managed to get a week's vacation. His wife, Barbara, joined him. Their four children, ranging in age from six to 15, remained at home in Chevy Chase, Md. "I'm on the go," Schulberg explained recently, "about six out of every 12 months of the year. Barbara claims this is a base fabrication—she says it's 11 out of 12 months."

He pointed out that because of the nature of the events they cover, they usually shoot or tape 10 times more material than the viewer finally sees on the air. The extensive coverage is carefully edited, so that only the most thrilling moments and high spots reach home screens.

Before being assigned to "Sports in Action" this past January, Schulberg had racked up a long list of credits in the film and TV mediums. The son of the late Hollywood motion picture producer B. F. Schulberg and literary agent Ad Schulberg, he was brought up during the "golden age" of movie-making. He was educated at the University of Chicago and attended the Ecole International.

It means that electricity works for you—enriches your home life—every day at bargain rates. Can you think of anything else that you buy that gives you so much for your money?

Serving you...with LOW-COST electricity.

Dear Abby . . . Understandable Goof!

Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: We met a nice-looking gentleman at a party recently and our host introduced him as "Mister Blank." The man became indignant and said, "DOCTOR Blank, please!" Our embarrassed host then corrected himself, but, apologetically, left us with this "Doctor Blank."

"Assuming he was an M.D., I asked, 'Do you specialize, Doctor?' He replied, 'I am NOT a medical doctor. I am in the hardware business.' He explained that he had BAINED (and he emphasized the word) a Ph.D. in Philosophy, which made him a doctor of philosophy and therefore he had as much right to the title of 'doctor' as a physician. Is this true?"

UNAWARE
DEAR UNAWARE: Very few Ph.D.'s who are not in education use their "doctor" titles, although they may if they wish. Your friend may require the services of a D.D.S. to help him get his foot out of his mouth.

DEAR ABBY: Something bothers me. I am a working widow soon to retire. I support my mother, which I consider a privilege because she is a wonderful person. My children are married. Because I have been a good manager and have watched my pennies, I have been able to help my married children out with loans from time to time. One of my sons borrowed a sizable amount of money from me four years ago and not once has he mentioned this debt. If he'd only say, "Mom, I haven't forgotten you." Or, "This note is to pay you off one of these days," just to let me know that he is aware of this debt. He and his wife are buying a lovely home and they have much nice furniture that I have. They have also just bought a new car. I am not hard up for money, Abby, but I would feel much better toward this son if he would only acknowledge his debt. I would also feel like doing so much more for his children than I have of late. Should I mention it?

FORGOTTEN MOM
DEAR MOM: YES!

DEAR ABBY: I think it's very nice to be a devoted mother and grandmother, but please say a word about a place for everything in this regard.

A woman in our office borrows everybody's to death with talk and snapshots of her children and grandchildren. When she sends a card for any occasion, she puts not only HER name on the card, but also her husband's, children's and grandchildren's. Now that's pretty nauseating. When her 17-year-old daughter picks her up at work, the girl will come sometimes two hours early and get in everybody's way, walking around, giggling and asking questions. Don't tell me to tell the office manager. I AM the office manager. But this woman has been here many more years than I, and I hesitate to fire her even though I have repeatedly warned her about this, but to no avail. Now what?

OFFICE MANAGER
DEAR MANAGER: To whom are you responsible for the efficiency of the office personnel? Take it up with your superior. This woman is money squandered in any organization. Seniority or no, the boss will be on your side.

CONFIDENTIAL TO WALTER: Take a little more time. Those who never have the time to do a job properly the first time always seem to find the time to do it over.

CHAPTER 14
THROUGH eyes half-closed against the low sun, Rosamund examined her husband's face, bronzed, sunburned, content. Probably he was only aware so far that time passed somehow much more pleasantly and amusingly when Lindy was there than when she wasn't. He looked so happy as he sat there in the mellow autumn light, so unsuspecting. She almost found herself crying out to him aloud. Look out... Look out... And then the going home - not to their own home, oh no, it had become established custom that after these expeditions they should go back to Lindy's for a drink before dinner, and talk about the pleasures of the day. Rosamund always joined in the conversation adequately enough, but all the time her mind was inclined to wander round this charming room hoping to find some dreadful face; some hideous streak of vulgarity or tastelessness. But it was no good. Sometimes the room was untidy, but always charmingly so. Shamelessly, Rosamund looked at each bit of furniture in turn, picturing it with nostalgic yearning, as it had appeared on the afternoon of the move, desk, shabby, and uninviting. Why couldn't it look like that again? And why couldn't Lindy look again like that dumpy little woman they had seen leaning into the moving van? The character of their Sunday expeditions changed, but they did not cease. They went to museums, and to art galleries; and it slowly dawned on Rosamund that this way of life had come to stay. It was on an evening in early December when this thought finally crystallized in her mind; an evening of thin, chilling fog creeping up from the pavements, drifting down from the low blanket of a starless London sky. The sort of evening to send workers and wayfarers hurrying home, heads down, their minds full of some bright cozy room, full of warmth and welcome. A room like Lindy's. Why should any man ever tire of the thought that a room like this was waiting for him? Rosamund realized that all this time she had been waiting, at the back of her mind, for some sort of come-a-head, for some sort of there would quite likely never be one; she would have to endure this threedom for always. It was strange that it should have been on this evening of all evenings, that Rosamund should have come to this fatalistic conclusion. For already, although she could not know it, the showdown was at hand. "Lindy's disappeared!" Staring giddily on the edge of the bed, Rosamund stared into her husband's face almost uncomprehending. For one mad thing it seemed the most natural thing in the world that Lindy should have disappeared, for in her dream Rosamund had killed her. How could she be expected to reappear after that? "Don't look so blank, darling!" Geoffrey urged her impatiently over the last weeks. "Lindy's disappeared!" "What? It's not possible!" "No, she didn't. Should she have? Surely she's just out seeing friends, or something?" "But she said - she told me. Everbody's right... Perhaps I'm making too much of it?" She could see that Geoffrey was trying to pull himself together. "But it was such a shock, somehow, finding the house all dark... no heating on... the little dog yapping... I've never seen it like that before." Geoffrey was quite shaken, she could see, and she could a little bit understand his feelings. Irrational, though of course they were, she tried to be consoling as well as reasonable. "Well, I'm sure there's nothing to worry about. She's sure to be back soon. And what about Eileen? Doesn't she know something?" "She's not there - she's been staying with that girl since the weekend. Wait a minute, though - I might call her... see if she's had some message..." He ran down the stairs and soon Rosamund heard his voice in the hall. "Hello? Yes. Yes, that's right, Eileen Forbes. Yes, if you would. Thanks." A long pause, and then: "Oh, Eileen, I'm glad I've caught you. I was wondering if you knew where Lindy is? She was going to call for me at the office (this was the first Rosamund had heard of it, but it seemed of no impor-

We suggested to Judge Robert Miller that while the administrator's house is empty that it be torn down and a decent house for the administrator be built somewhere away from the hospital.

If we were applying for the job, the house as it is would offer little inducement to us.

The disaster occurred about 6 p.m. when a large section of the Alladin shifter broke loose on Strabhorn Mountain, 13,700 feet high, and tumbled down the slopes into the river.

advance construction camp at the 6,800-foot level. An estimated 300,000 pounds of debris traveled 1,650 feet in just 90 seconds.

The workers were trying to complete the project before cold weather and winter snows. The men were mostly Italian workers who crossed the border to sign up for the high pay but dangerous construction job.

The avalanche trapped some of the victims in a canteen where they were eating the evening meal before heading for work. Most of the dead were asleep in wooden barracks.

1,800 Men Working

About 1,800 men were involved in the job, but most had completed their tricks and had retired to other camps below the advance site. The slide stopped short of the lower housing area.

The dam itself was not in the path of the slide.

The slide tossed 40-ton earthmoving machines like corks caught in a tidal wave. A huge cloud of dust visible for miles rose into the late afternoon sky.

Hundreds of Swiss soldiers, police, Red Cross workers and volunteers rushed to the disaster with more than 30 ambulances. The ambulances were sent away because there was no hope for the buried men.

Swiss avalanche experts said there were two possible causes for the disaster: The warm weather and construction dynamiting.

LA. Gov. Harry Lee Waterfield was expected to introduce an opposing tax measure in the state Senate later today.

The Waterfield proposal to solve problems arising from the state Court of Appeals' full assessment ruling is similar to the Kentucky Farm Bureau's recommendation—a flat 50-cent rate compared with the present $1.50 per $100 of valuation.

The Waterfield bill has not yet been introduced in the special legislative session pending action by the House on the administration measure.

The administration bill calls for a so-called "rollback" in tax rates with the stipulation that school boards and fiscal courts could increase taxes as much as 10 per cent for the next two years.

The two-year limitation was placed on the increases Monday evening at a meeting of the Rules Committee.

At Monday's meeting a number of "housekeeping" amendments were added to Gov. Edward T. Breathitt's bill.

No mention was made of a proposed 1/2 of 1 per cent occupational tax for Jefferson County and Louisville schools. Leading Republican legislators from the state's largest county to accuse Breathitt of reneging on a commitment to them.

They claimed the governor's position was less affirmative on the occupational tax now than it had been previously.

House Speaker Shelby McCallum, D-Marshall, said he saw little difficulty ahead for the administration's bill, as amended, now in the Rules Committee. He said he felt the two-year limitation and other minor amendments would make the bill more palatable to the majority of the House members.

However, there remained the legislative hurdle of the Senate Rules Committee—a group that is hand-
