Farm Coops Against Plan To Hike Wage

By BERNARD BRENNER
United Press International
WASHINGTON (UPI) — The National Council of Farmer Cooperatives has come out against President Kennedy's plan to raise the federal minimum wage.

Kennedy wants the wage floor raised from $1 to $1.25 an hour over a three-year period. The administration bill also would extend minimum wage protection to 4.3 million additional workers.

The farm co-op council says these newly covered workers would include many retail and service employees in rural areas. The council says this would force up prices and costs in rural areas, putting an added burden on farmers.

The council has pledged to wage a strong fight against the Kennedy plan. It says the wage bill would add significantly to the cost-price squeeze in agriculture.

An Agriculture Department expert says 1961 would be a relatively good year for hog producers.

Earl Miller, a government livestock economist, said hog prices this year would average $15.40 a hundredweight. He added, however, that farmers should beware of the danger of over-production and resulting lower prices in 1962.

The Agriculture Department specialist said prices would not change much from present levels.

By mid-year, however, the 1961 spring pig crop will begin moving to market. On the basis of preliminary reports, Miller said, the crop could be about five per cent larger than the 1960 spring pig crop.

If the increase was no more than that, Miller said, the seasonal price decline would be no greater than usual. Prices next fall would be below the levels of a year earlier, he said, but there would be no severe seasonal drop.

The Agriculture Department says storage stocks of potatoes in fall producing areas totaled about 816 million hundredweight on Feb. 1, seven per cent above one year earlier but three per cent below the big stocks of two years ago.

The Crop Reporting Board has indicated that turkey production is headed up this year.

The board estimated turkey breeder hens on farms totaled 4.2 million on Jan. 1, an increase of 27 per cent over the number of breeder hens on hand one year ago.

The increase was 30 per cent for heavy-breed turkeys and four per cent for light-weight types.

A Stirring Western Suspense Novel

The Lean Rider by CLIFF FARRELL

CHAPTER 15

LISA RANDOLPH understood what was happening in the gap. The first of Kemp Travis's herds had found themselves confronted by a barrier of fire. The explosions had added to the terror. The cattle had turned tail and the stampede had swept back through the gap upon the second herd. Some six thousand animals were jammed in the pass, struggling to escape by the way they had entered.

Lisa and Hester Barbee heard the faint, ashing sound of gunfire. This went on for a time. Silence came, except for the continuing low mutter or turmoil in the gap. First light of the rising sun touched the peaks.

Presently Hester spoke in a thin voice. "Here they come! At least they're both still alive!"

A horse bearing two riders came out of the gray dawn. Abel Barbee and Paul Dryzel were unhurt.

"They sighted us on the cliff and smoked us up," Paul explained. "But they only wanted powder."

Lisa and Abel stood looking at each other. Abel said to her, "It's right nice to be back. Mighty nice."

He gazed toward the gorge. "Travis is losing a lot in that pile-up," he said. "It was mighty bad. He'll never get the rest of the cattle into that gap again. He'll have to take 'em east through the mountains into the sagebrush country. That's days longer, an' hard going. I doubt if he'll stampede us any more. I figure he's had enough of that. He's got his work cut out, gettin' even three thousand head to Reno before delivery date."

They returned to where their own herd had been bedded. Residents of Walkerville were on the scene, examining the site of the explosion and standing around the blanket-covered body of Red Lettler. Two men from the town agreed to take charge of the body.

"Kemp Travis will see that he's buried decently, or should," Abel told them. "He worked for Travis. You'll find Travis's herd in the basin there beyond the gorge, and he'll likely be with them."

They began rounding up their own cattle, which were scattered over a hundred square miles of territory. That task required three days of hard riding, for the run had been long, sustained, and many of the Longhorns had fled into the breaks along the base of the mountains.

They tallied the cattle on the morning of the fourth day. Abel was shifting pebbles from one hand to another to mark each hundred head of animals as they were driven in a straggling column past him.

Lisa sat on her horse near him. She had a needle and thread, and placed a temporary white stitch in the cuff of her blouse for each hundred.

Abel counted his pebbles as the last of the drag plodded past. "I make it twenty-nine hundred and forty," he said.

"Forty-one," Lisa said, totaling her stitches. "But you do real well at counting. Where did you learn?"

"Not with a needle and thread at least," he said. "It's forty even, an' if I'm wrong you've got the fanciest new dress you can buy in Reno as a present."

They drove northward again. Abel was tight in his seat one surmise. Travis did not again attempt to stampede them.

It was four days later and they were ten miles from their destination when Perry Diehl came riding to meet them, accompanied by a half a dozen riders from Diehl & Diehl.

Perry Diehl stared incredulously from one face to another. His eyes rested blankly on Lisa. He did not recognize her.

Abel spoke. "She's a redheaded flutie who's been taggin' along with us."

"Is it really you, Miss Randolph?" Diehl asked, stunned. "I think so," Lisa said. "I'm not really sure."

The next morning she sat watching while the herd was tallied and delivered to Diehl and his riders. After the count was ended and the cattle were turned out to graze for a time on grass, Abel rode up and dismounted.

"Go pick out that dress," he said. "Diehl & Diehl are paying off on twenty-nine hundred and forty-one delivered."

He added, "Make it a wedding dress."

She sat looking at him smiling, and within her was a soaring happiness. "If that's a proposal," she said, "it will have to be stated more plainly."

"Will you marry me?" he began. "Yes!" she exclaimed, and kissed him. "But the wedding dress will come later. When we're in our green valley. This will be a party dress. Something gay. Something in which to celebrate, now that it's all over."

She studied him and felt that his lightness was a mask. There was something that he and the other men were keeping from her.

"It is all over, isn't it?" she demanded.

He did not seem to hear that question.

Perry Diehl joined them. "T've engaged rooms for all of you at the Comstock House. And tonight you're to be my guests at supper. There'll be champagne. And more champagne."

At the Comstock House, Lisa and Hester arrayed themselves in the best of what finery they possessed and set out to amplify their wardrobes.

The herd had been delivered eight days ahead of contract date, earning a bonus of two dollars a head. Diehl & Diehl had paid in gold, the bulk of which was in a bank strong box for safekeeping. Sixty-four thousand, seven hundred dollars. Lisa's share, after the crew and other expenses had been paid, would take care of all of Frank O'Hara's debts. There would be little or nothing left, but she believed she was entitled to buy a little finery, at least.

Reno was a boom town and had stores with displays for feminine taste that were proclaimed as the latest styles from the east. Lisa and Hester plunged into the joy of a shopping spree.

They were trying on bonnets in a milliner's shop when Lisa suddenly became motionless. Through the window she watched three men pass by on the sidewalk.

One was Kemp Travis.

All three carried pistols in holsters beneath the skirts of their coats. Travis's coat, anions each had two weapons.

One of the pair with Travis was thin and dark, with a hard face and very black eyes set deep beneath bony brows. He had a drooping black mustache. He was a stranger to Lisa.

The other was a powerfully-framed man with high, square shoulders. His features were heavy, almost bumpy, and his skin was burned darker than the others. Small knots of muscles played on his jaws.

There was something about him that was important and she kept gazing at him. Somewhere she had seen him in the past and that was where the importance came in. But she could not place her finger on the time or the place.

Hester was also gazing at the trio, and Lisa saw in her face the same gray and chilling apprehension that she knew must be mirrored in her own expression.

Lisa pointed to the swarthy man. "Who is that man?"

"Him?" Hester asked dully. "Surely you ought to know him! You seen him kill Matthew. He tried to maul you up the time you was lost. That's a real bad man."

"There was no backing out now . . . he went for his pistols . . ." the story comes to a dramatic end tomorrow.

Pottertown Club Has Regular Meet At Ragsdale Home

Mrs. Maynard Ragsdale opened her home for the February meeting of the Pottertown Homemakers Club.

The major project lesson on the subject, "Mixing Old and New Furniture," was presented by Mrs. Hoyt McClure, assisted by Mrs. Barletta Wrathe. Mrs. W. A. Ladd gave the devotion from Hebrews 13:8.

Miss Patsy McClure from Murray College High, assisted by Miss Shirley Crutcher, gave a very inspiring talk on the seven areas of homemaking.

A covered dish luncheon was served by Mrs. Ragsdale.

Members present were Mesdames Mary Brown Elkins, Joe Roberts, Hoyt McClure, Madeline Parker, W. A. Ladd, Edna Parker, Robbie Witherspoon, Willodene Rodgers, Aline Nelson, Laurene McCuiston, Maynard Ragsdale, and Milburn Outland.

Visitors were Mesdames Kate Melugin, Christine Kelley, Juanita Stallon, Vera Hutchens, Verna Mae Farley, Billie Farley, Cozy Lawrence, and Mary Wheeler. Misses McClure and Crutcher.

The March meeting will be held with Mrs. James Parker.

Hasseltine Class Meets At Garland Home On Thursday

The Ann Hasseltine Class of the Memorial Baptist Church met in the home of Mrs. Lester Garland on Thursday evening at seven o'clock.

Mrs. J. O. Reeves presented an inspirational devotion from Matthew 22:36-39 using as the theme, "Love Thy Neighbor." She told several short stories and closed with prayer.

NEW NATO CHIEF—Successor to resigning Paul-Henri Spaak of Belgium as NATO secretary general is likely to be Dirk U. Stikker (above) of the Netherlands. It is believed in diplomatic circles.

Peter Kroger, 50, book salesman, and wife Helen, 47, said to be operators of a spy HQ in a suburban bungalow. A shortwave radio transmitter was found in the home.

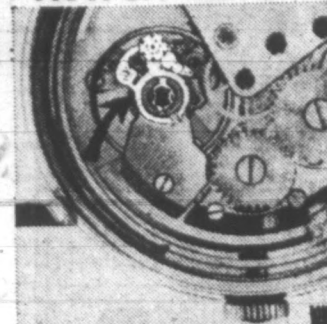

Henry Houghton, 55, Portland navy yard pay clerk, shown when he was in the navy, and Gordon Lonsdale, 37, a businessman. Prosecution says middleman Lonsdale took documents from Houghton to the Krigers for transmission on to Moscow.

LONDON SPY CASE—Here are four of the five defendants in Britain's biggest spy case since Klaus Fuchs in 1950. The fifth is Ethel Gee, 46, a co-worker at the Portland navy yard with accused Henry Houghton. The British fear plans for defense against the Soviet's 450-craft sub fleet have been channeled right to the Kremlin.

NEW SPACE-AGE WATCH DEVICE

The ingenious Swiss have invented a remarkable new device called the Triostat (arrow) — smaller than the head of a match — that makes the average wrist watch keep time as precisely as the most expensive timepiece. With it as part of your watch, jewelers now will be able to make repairs more quickly and accurately than ever before, say jewelers, the developers who also invented the shock absorber used in most watches.

The jeweler will correct errors in watch speed without expensive repairs by merely turning the super-sensitive "fast-slow" regulator. Using this revolutionary invention, he can quickly adjust other important functions of the movement such as the hairspring and the beat.

The new miniature mechanism is one of the latest contributions of the world's watch industry to keep pace with the increased demands for timing accuracy of space-age scientists and the general public.

NO PUNISHMENT

PINOLE, Calif. (AP) — Mark Ferreira, 5, is told to stay in bed even though he awakes an hour before his parents. He disobeyed these orders recently when he awoke to find the home was burning.

He called his parents, Mr. and Mrs. George A. Ferreira, who managed to get Mark and two other children, Nancy, 3, and David, 11, to safety. Twenty-three firemen put out the blaze, caused by a smoldering carton near a garage wall.
