Seen & Heard Around Murray

Old Sport came in yesterday morning looking as though he had been pulled through a briar patch.

He had been missing for two days and was thought maybe someone had picked him up to hunt Jay Birds with or something.

Sport looked best. He was tired, footsore, and he had a bale and a half of cockle burrs on him. Looked about half scared too.

We petted him and fed him a Christmas dinner and after a while he got ok. He even slobbered a little to show his appreciation.

Here are some more of those outstanding folks named by Who's Who for special honor. Different people were named in different categories. Look them over. These folks are doing a lot with their lives.

Government — Joseph S. Clark, Jr., Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, former mayor of Philadelphia, now U.S. Senator from Pennsylvania. "A staunch humanitarian and a politician with a difference," Senator Clark has sponsored anti-poverty legislation and actively supported disarmament. His citation reads: "Senator Clark has been a leader in the fight against poverty and neglect, those who would put their private interests above the public good, and those afraid to take the steps to prevent what could certainly be the last world war."

Government — John Cooper, Somerset, Kentucky. "The Bluegrass State is invariably ably represented in the Congress" and certainly these two senators are no exception. Prior to election, Senator Cooper had an illustrious career as judge and ambassador, and his record as one of the more vigorous and influential senators is exemplary."

Senator Morton was assistant secretary of state for Congressional Relations, and chairman of the Republican National Committee before his election. His citation notes that he "has had the distinction to be one in public life who does not hesitate to admit that he could be wrong."

Government — John Conyers, Jr., Detroit, Michigan, serving his first term in the United States House of Representatives. One of the new young voices in politics, his citation lauds him as having been "very active and articulate during his brief period in Congress, and (representing) well his constituency with its plethora of urban problems characteristic of today."

Government — John Vliet Lindsay, New York, N.Y., veteran congressman and current mayor of New York, he has built an administration characterized by vigor, forcefulness and purpose. "As mayor of one of the most problem-ridden cities in the United States, he has served 'strictly full time' and with 'rare personal integrity.' He has tried to 'build a government that reflects the needs of its citizens.' Mayor Lindsay's citation concludes that he 'has been a politician, who is more than a politician — a voice of concern and genuine compassion.'"

Journalism — Ralph Emerson McGill, Atlanta, Georgia, publisher of the Atlanta Constitution and a widely syndicated columnist. His writings have merited him several awards including a Pulitzer Prize, while he has also been active in civic endeavors. His citation calls him as "a notable force for enlightenment in his home community and throughout the nation."

Law — James Skelly Wright, Washington, D.C., U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals Judge whose

Works Of Cromwell Hauge Are Shown At Bank Of Murray

The Bank of Murray is featuring the work of Cromwell Hauge in a current exhibit which opened Monday in the lobby of the bank. The exhibit will run through April 30.

The artist, Mr. Hauge, was born in Newport and resided in Cincinnati, Ohio. He studied at the Art Academy of Cincinnati under the name of Gertrude Cromwell Kennedy as a regular student 1944-1947. She now resides near Kentucky Lake on the Faxon Road in Calloway County and is a member of the Seventh Day Adventist Church in Murray.

With such an abundant wealth of beautiful scenery in Calloway County, she has been concentrating on landscapes and is interested in producing enough works depicting landmarks in the county to have a one man show in December. Portraiture is another chief interest.

The artist works principally in soft pastel as it is easier to carry chalk and requires less "setting-up" time. Often there is not enough roadside room to set up an easel so she props her drawing board against her steering wheel and catches the essence of the scene during the brief time she can park her car, and finishes it from memory in the studio.

Five examples of her recent work is now on exhibit at the Bank of Murray. Three examples are in a room display in one of the windows at Enix Interiors on Chestnut Street.

Four Groups Cooperate In Joint Effort

Volunteer workers are donating their services today in the community service day called by Calloway County Judge Hall McCulston to aid in the cleaning up of the devastated tornado areas of Almo Heights, Dexter, and New Concord in Calloway County.

The volunteers met at the various places this morning with their equipment to help in the process of cleaning up the areas hit by the tornado winds that dipped down here last Wednesday at midnight taking the lives of two young people, Mr. and Mrs. Douglas Ladd of Dexter Route One.

The Ladds' three room frame house was completely destroyed as winds dipped down on Highway 1346. The young couple was thrown across the road into the lot of the Joany Ramsey home.

Just east of the Ladd home on the same highway the trailer home of Mrs. Josephine Clements was destroyed. She along with Miss Robbie Morris, age 11, were injured in the storm. Other persons also received injuries including Mrs. Clara Thorn and Mrs. Ada Colson near the Thewatts Trailer Court area on Highway 641.

The trailer home of Mrs. Colson was completely destroyed and the new brick home of Mrs. Thorn and her husband, Claude, was destroyed.

A number of trailers in Thewatts Trailer Court were damaged considerably. The pipes and other connections in the trailers were knocked from the mobile homes.

In the New Concord area the homes of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Bucy, Mr. and Mrs. Eurlie Garland, and Bub Garland were damaged in the storm.

Other damage to homes and outbuildings in the areas was reported. The volunteers today are trying to help the storm hit citizens to restore some order to their homes and clean the limbs and debris from the area.

The Calloway County Rescue Squad and the American Red Cross are directing the operations through the cooperation of the ROTC and other service organizations.

Mrs. Jean Blankenship, executive secretary of the Red Cross, told the Ledger & Times this morning that two mobile units of the Red Cross are working in the area serving sandwiches and coffee to the volunteer workers.

The Red Cross units are being directed by Mrs. Curtis Hays, chairman of the Red Cross Volunteers, assisted by Mrs. Juanita Spiceland and Mrs. Paul Lynn, unit chairmen. They were in charge of gathering the materials and surplus commodities along with donated items to prepare to serve the workers today.

Mrs. T. A. Thacker, a Red Cross volunteer, assembled a group of volunteers today to prepare the food this morning. Numerous persons, organizations, and churches have donated clothing, household furnishings, and other items.

The Hardin Church of Christ asked the Ledger & Times this morning to announce that they have furnishings, home appliances, clothing, shoes and food to give to any of the victims free of charge. Those persons desiring these are asked to come to the church.

This is the second tornado that has hit Calloway and Marshall Counties in five years. On March 4, 1964, the areas north of Kirby, the Highway 80 area west of Hardin, and the Fairdaling communities were hit by the storm. This tornado was located about three or four miles from the path of the 1964 disaster.

The area near the Unity Cumberland Presbyterian Church on Highway 80 east of Hardin was hard hit by the tornado last week with injuries being reported to a number of persons. Crews are also working to restore this area.

Marines Move Out Of Khe Sanh Today

By JACK WALSH
SAIGON 475 — The Marines of the Khe Sanh turned over their fort to the U. S. Army today and moved out to smash the North Vietnamese army that besieged their northern frontier bastion for 73 days.

"It's about time we got out there and chased them," said Lance Cpl. Gary Harris, 20, of Lubbock, Tex., one of the 6,000 Marines who lived like moles during the weeks of day and night bombardment. "Now we can get our revenge."

Troops of the Army 1st Air Cavalry Division, blowing "Chargers" on a captured Communist bugle, walked the final two miles into the fort Sunday to complete the week-long, 20,000-man Operation Pegasus drive that broke the siege of Khe Sanh. Today's gleeful Marines presented their bunkers to the Army, slapped off the red dust from their fatigues and struck out for the jungle hills that hid their tormentors.

Glad To Leave
"Yes, yes, yes," said Col. David Lowndes of Plantation, Fla., the Marine commander of Khe Sanh when UPI correspondent Raymond Wilkinson asked if he was glad to leave the battered plateau just below the North Vietnam border.

"I'm definitely happy to be 'out' again," said the Marine officer who held the fort. Hanoi vowed to take with 20,000 troops.

Whistling a happy tune, Lowndes men marched out beyond the barbed wire. In came the second battalion of the 7th Cavalry. Col. Hubert S. Campbell of Chicago, Ill., became the Army chief of Khe Sanh.

The switch came after the forces of Pegasus and some Lowndes men reported killing more than 200 North Vietnamese in a series of battles around the base Sunday. The bad days of Khe Sanh appeared over.

"All we will keep in Khe Sanh will be local security. We have forces working all around this area, so we don't need too many troops in the perimeter," said Army Brig. Gen. Oscar Davis of Tucson, Ariz.

Other Battles Reported
The Siege was over. But the battle for control of South Vietnam's Communist-infested northern frontier roared on. Beside the fighting in the hills near the fort, Leatherneck 25 miles southwest of the coastal city of Da Nang killed at least 68 Communists in a Sunday battle that cost no American casualties.

munities were hit by the storm. This tornado was located about three or four miles from the path of the 1964 disaster.

The area near the Unity Cumberland Presbyterian Church on Highway 80 east of Hardin was hard hit by the tornado last week with injuries being reported to a number of persons. Crews are also working to restore this area.

Georgia Builds A State Park For Handicapped

WINDER, Ga. (UPI)—Most Americans take outdoor recreation for granted, but a state park's trails and facilities often present problems for the handicapped.

Georgia, aided by a $642,243 grant from the Department of the Interior, is building a state park designed solely for handicapped persons and their families.

The park, to be located in the 1,680-acre Port Yargo State Park in north-central Georgia, will feature braille direction signs, wheelchair trails and bicycles, and other outdoor activities easy for the handicapped.

Now in the design stage and several years from completion, the park is expected to cost more than $1.3 million.

Many states have made their parks accessible to the disabled, but Port Yargo will be the first park especially designed for the handicapped, according to Georgia park officials.

All facilities will be constructed with consideration of the convenience of the blind, those confined to wheelchairs and persons with partial or no use of their arms or legs.

The facilities will include trails, playground equipment, outdoor games, swimming, picnicking, fishing, boating and the like.

The park will be constructed around a group camp and a family-cottage area — a unique feature of the project offering vacation while rental cottages to the families of the handicapped.

Lake beaches will be equipped with easy-access ramps and even the boats will have special apparatus to enable wheelchairs to be brought aboard easily.

Henry D. Struble, deputy director of the Department of State Parks, said he expects the park to be heavily used when it is completed. He estimated there are 18,000 handicapped persons living within a 75-mile radius of the park.

LANA CANTRELL Singer Jittery After, Not Before, Show

By PATRICIA E. DAVIS

NEW YORK (UPI) — Australian singer LANA Cantrell admits to being different from most entertainers.

"I get a terrific case of nerves AFTER I've performed, not before, like everyone else," she says. "When I'm getting ready to do a television show, I just calmly stand around waiting to go on while everybody else is leaping around or having a case of the shakes. They all hate me, they really do."

Lana, whom recording and nightclub critics have called "vibrant," "exciting," "unusual" and "a singer's singer," confesses that after she does a show she goes to pieces. "I just have to talk, talk, talk," she says.

"Usually I have a group of my friends around and they indulge me by patiently listening until I unwind. But if someone goes wrong in a show, especially my conductor . . . disappears till I calm down."

Lana, 23, a lanky Twigg type, was born in Sydney, Australia. Her love for music, she says, was inspired by her father, a bass player.

At an early age Lana began taking piano lessons and would sing along as she played. She gave her first professional performance at the age of 10 at Sydney Town Hall. By the time she was 15, Lana was appearing regularly on Australian television and later appeared in many of Australia's top night clubs.

Peeling she had gone as far as she could in Australia, Lana came to the United States in 1965.

Looks To 'The Top'
Although she has become a popular recording and night club performer, Lana says she realizes she hasn't hit "the top" yet.

"I know it will probably be years yet," she says, "before I can hope to headline at Las Vegas. They star just the really top performers there."

In Las Vegas, Lana generally opens the show. "When you're the act before a big name star," she says, "it's often hard to get the audience's attention."

So Lana decided to open her act with a ballad rather than a loud, flashy number . . . a practically unheard-of gimmick . . . and shook her audience into silence. Her unique idea was successful and it has become, along with her Sasoon haircut — a Cantrell trademark.

Lana, who admits she dislikes all the traveling her career requires, shares a plush East Side Manhattan apartment with her Afghan hound puppy, Christian.

One reason she dislikes traveling, Lana notes, is that it is difficult to find the types of food she eats . . . she's on a microbiotic diet and eats mainly grains. "I've never felt better since I started this diet," Lana says. "I feel so light and full of energy. When I travel, though, I can't stick to it . . . so I end up eating cheese omelets most of the time."

Lana says that despite the traveling she really loves her work. "I just can't wait to get on the stage," she says. "If a comedian is on before me, I find myself, standing offstage muttering under my breath, 'Get off, get off — it's my turn now!'"

Queen Bee Found By Expert As Buzzing Stops

VALDOSTA, Ga. (UPI) — Mr. and Mrs. B. C. Holland had apes mellifera trouble here Wednesday. So did the police, the fire department and a few other sundry persons until Albert S. Blanks arrived on the scene.

Apis mellifera is the scientific name for bees and Blanks is an expert on the subject thereof. He knows about workers, drones and the overwhelming enchantment of queens.

The bees swarmed to the Holland house, perhaps 100,000 strong, in chase of a queen who took refuge through a plumbing hole in an outside wall.

The buzzing was too much for the Hollands. He stuck a stick in the hole in the wall. Forty thousand bees landed on the stick, creating a big buzzing mass.

Holland called police. They looked the matter over. A case for firemen, they reasoned. The firemen arrived. Purely outside their ken, they said. Blanks was summoned.

The bee expert had a board pried off the wall, and reaching inside, pulled out a handful of buzzing bees. Carefully he brushed off the wad, finally finding the queen.

Taking a pocketknife, Blanks delicately trimmed the queen's wings and dropped her into an empty wooden hive.

Then came the new rush and Blanks went home with a new hive of bees.

Spring Grid Work Starts This Weekend

Spring football practice will get underway at Murray State University this weekend with a squad of 68 players, 29 of whom are lettermen.

Coach Bill Furgerson reports that workouts will be conducted on Tuesday, Wednesday, Friday, and Saturday afternoons.

Only two players, flanker Harvey Tanner and tackle Jeff Farmer, have been lost by graduation from last year's team, which compiled a 4-6 record during Furgerson's first year as coach.

However, Tanner's loss is a big one, as he was the nation's leading pass receiver and a vital cog in Murray's flamboyant offense. Farmer was also a starter on the offensive unit.

Back for his final year of competition will be Larry Tillman, who led the OVC in passing yardage and total offense and was in the top 5 in the nation in both categories. Tillman rewrote both the conference and Murray State record books in passing last year.

Furgerson thinks the Racers will be significantly improved next fall but feels most of the other OVC teams will be also. He thinks increased depth will be the greatest factor toward Murray's improvement but that experience gained last season will also be most beneficial.

Spring practice will continue until mid-May and will be climaxed by the annual spring game.

Calloway Wins Over Benton In Baseball

Standout basketball player Stan Key pitched hitless ball for three innings in relief and added a double and a single in three times at bat to spark Calloway County to a narrow 4-3 baseball victory over Benton here Monday afternoon.

With Benton leading 3-2, Key relieved starter Mike Ernstberger and blanketed the Indians the rest of the way to earn the victory.

Ernstberger also was two for three at the plate. Leading the Indians were Dennis Dunn and Steve Cary, both of whom collected a pair of hits, one a triple by Dunn.

It was the opener for both teams. Calloway County will host Lone Oak here Thursday.

American League President Elated Over Team Managers

By JOSEPH E. CRONIN
President, American League
Written for UPI

BOSTON 99 — I would like to say at the outset of this annual pre-season story that we in the American League feel extremely elated over the high caliber of managers we have in our league this season.

I have spent much time in each and every camp this spring around our league and the incisiveness and competence of these 10 men had to impress everyone.

With such outstanding leadership, I feel certain we are going to have another good race. Some of my friends in the news media chuckled last spring when I mentioned that the American League race looked as if it might be one of the tightest we had for some years. Well, the way it turned out, we had the best pennant race in the league's history.

And now they are asking me if I can predict another race as tight. Why not? We have a balance in the American League that I feel assures us of another knock-down, drag-out battle.

Club Stoppers
We have so many outstanding pitchers in the American League that every club has a "stopper." By a stopper I mean a pitcher who can go out there and shut out any team on a given day.

In short, there are no teams in the American League who cannot beat the other teams. This is what constitutes great pennant races. It means balance. I was impressed with the Chicago White Sox. Anytime you have four starters such as Horlen, Peters, Tomasz, John and Cisco Carlos you've got to be tough. Detroit looked like a very solid team also, a team that fairly exuded confidence.

Type Confidants
Mayo Smith has had a good opportunity to study his personnel this spring. A year ago he was taking over a new team and necessarily had to learn about his newcomers. Al Karline and Jim Northrup and Ed Mathews and Bill Frehn provide the Tigers with plenty of power and defense. Their pitching can be outstanding. I thought Detroit showed as much confidence as any team I saw.

Boston's defending champions, naturally, are going to miss such a standout pitcher as Jim Lonborg. It remains for the Red Sox to find several pitchers to take up the slack until Lonborg is ready. I hope that Jim doesn't try to rush himself back into action, because I've seen too many players in the past who injured their arms by trying to return too fast.

Carl Yastrzemski is our most valuable player. He saved the title, no doubt of that, off his tremendous performance in 1967. He has arrived as a true star and should be equally effective this season.

Cleveland, under Al Dark, should be improved. Indians have some very fine pitchers in Sam McDowell, Sonny Siebert, Steve Hargan and Luis Tiant. This team can be the sleeper team in our league. Washington, too, has some fine talent. I like particularly their young second baseman, Frank Cogins. He's a corner, as is first baseman Mike Epstein.

California has a fine double play combination in Jim Fregosi and Bobby Knoop. Pitching will be a key with the Angels who did so much to determine the winner in our hectic race last season.

Oakland's A's have some of the finest young talent around. If this team reaches maturity under Bob Kennedy, then we're going to see something.

Yanks Experiment
The Yankees have been experimenting a lot this spring. An outfield of Tresh, Whitaker and Pepitone is good. Micker Mantle is still the king and shows remarkable resilience as he prepares for another season. Minnesota strengthened its catching with John Roseboro. He is a true workman behind the plate. I thought the Twins hadn't jelled when I saw them in the spring, but I expect Cal Ermer will have them ready for the opener against the Senators.

Baltimore's problem is pitching. If Phoebus and Hardin can keep up some of the slack for Hank Bauer, the Orioles will be formidable indeed.

Any reason I shouldn't think of another torrid race?

Backstairs At The White House

By MERRIMAN SMITH
UPI White House Reporter
WASHINGTON (UPI) —

Backstairs at the White House. It was possible from behind White House fences to get fleeting glimpses of what was happening to America's image abroad during violence that swept many cities after the death of Dr. Martin Luther King.

There was an urgent telephone call to the White House Sunday from London. One of America's best known columnists, Rowland Evans, was flying from the Atlantic aboard a commercial airliner bound for Washington.

Safe Conduct
The Airline's London office wanted to arrange, through the good offices of the White House, "safe conduct" for Evans from Dulles International Airport in suburban Virginia to the columnist's home in the fashionable Georgetown section of Washington.

The conclusion at this end of the overseas call was that the British airline people, in concern for a passenger getting through Washington had been turned into one large battle-ground.

Actually, the route from Dulles to Georgetown was far from — the area of the nation's capital where the disorders were centered. But the impression abroad must have been that the entire town was in flames.

The Advice
The advice was to stay away from the trouble area and conform with the curfew, although police and soldiers probably would not have been too strict in curfew enforcement for vehicles bearing diplomatic license plates.

There has been no rioting close to the White House, although there was some looting only two blocks from 1600 Pennsylvania Ave.

BOATING

NEW YORK (UPI) — George Lawrence, president of a Minnesota sign manufacturing company, has done a lot of boating in extremely shallow waters and rock-strewn streams, a good part of it through rugged rapids.

Lawrence never found a boat he felt was quite suitable for such waters. So he designed one.

A bit unconventional, the new line of Lawrence boats is now on the market. They may prove a boon for fishermen, hunters, campers, forest rangers and others who often need to navigate rough water where conventional motor-driven boats cannot travel.

Lawrence's boat is called "Little Blow." The name derives from the manner in which the boats are propelled — by a fan-type, stern-mounted motor.

There are two models of the square-ended, flat-bottomed craft. One measures 4-feet wide by 10-feet long by 16 inches deep and can carry three passengers. The second is 4-feet wide by 12-feet long and can handle four passengers.

The smaller, or standard, Little Blow has a five-horsepower, gasoline-fed, air-cooled motor weighing about 48 pounds and fitted with a 28-inch-long propeller blade. The motor, which has a recoil starter, is clamped along the stern of the boat much in the same fashion as any outboard.

The stern is reinforced with marine plywood to provide right motor mounting. No part hangs over into the water. The boat is maneuvered by means of a pilot stick which is attached to the motor directly below the fan. The five-horsepower motor propels the boat at speeds up to eight miles per hour.

"We could put on higher powered motors if speed was our object," says Lawrence. "But one wouldn't want to go much faster in the type of water in which the boats are designed to be used."

Because of their lightweight — the smaller model weighs only 145 pounds — the boats easily are hauled by car trailer or upon an automobile roof.

For portaging, there is a bed with two bicycle-type wheels that attaches to the back. During portaging the motor can be used to help propel the boat over land, providing the motor is in a locked position.

The Little Blows are constructed primarily of Kydex acrylic polyvinyl-chloride sheet, a tough plastic which is impact and abrasion resistant and exceptionally durable.

A single sheet of the plastic comprises the boat bottom and to give it added strength and rigidity separate four-inch crossribs of Kydex that form an X are attached to the floor with metal bolts.

The boats have plastic-covered, foam-filled cushions that rest atop aluminum seat frames. The seat frames are bolted to the sides and floor of the boat. The seat wells are filled with foam for extra flotation and buoyancy.

The boats also have a mahogany-like deck with a small storage area below.

One of the best known chroniclers of the boating scene is retiring. At the age of 87, Charles P. Chapman is stepping down after more than 55 years as editor, publisher and vice president of Motor Boating magazine.

Chapman's book, Piloting, Seamanship and Small Boat Handling, first published in 1916, has sold some two million copies. It remains the "bible" of the boating courses offered by the U.S. Power Squadrons and the U.S. Coast Guard Auxiliaries.

Scat or Stay When Cat Gives Birth

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: About the couple who wanted to know if their four-year-old should watch the cat have her kittens. Cats do not like for people to watch the birth of their kittens. It makes them nervous. Sometimes they will become so upset and confused, they will take off, leaving their new-born kittens to starve. I regret to say that I have watched this cat birth with bad results.

Why doesn't this couple look up some farmer who has a sow about to become a mother and arrange for a look-see? Much more interesting, and the sow couldn't care less if the President of the United States was watching. CAT LOVER

DEAR ABBY: By all means, children should witness the birth of kittens, puppies, cows, pigs and any other animals whenever possible.

We are a farming family, and have been raised on farms for three generations, and there never was any mystery about such things. I think farm-reared children have a much more wholesome attitude about sex than city kids because they live so close to Nature. KANSAS READER

DEAR ABBY: If parents want to give their little ones an education in how kittens come into the world, better make sure the mother cat is in on it. We had the same idea, TWICE, and both times the cat sneaked off and had her kittens where no one could watch her. Cats are funny. They don't like an audience. M. AND H.

DEAR ABBY: Tell that couple who asked whether they should allow their small children to watch a cat have kittens that here is one couple who have done so, and recommend it highly. That one experience answered a lot of questions that we could not have answered nearly so well in words.

A SUGGESTION, HOWEVER: Try to get a mother cat who has already had a litter. The first time is sometimes more difficult for the mother cat, and it may frighten the children.

DEAR ABBY: If anyone had asked me whether they should allow their children to see a cat give birth, I would have told them to give the poor cat her privacy.

We raise sheep, and at lambing time, we respect the ewe's natural instinct, and allow her to wander off by herself. Cattle in an open field will instinctively circle a cow that is calving in order to give her privacy. I have seen it happen.

If the bright little lad asks where babies come from, tell him a lie! Tell him the old stork story. He'll love it. After all, he enjoys the Santa Claus story, doesn't he? All kids love "fairy" stories. The more fantastic, the better.

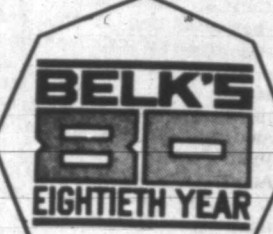

The "bright" kids of 15 and 20 years ago who were told EVERYTHING so truthfully and completely, now have the baby homes filled with unwanted offspring. After all, they knew it all. What was there left to do but experiment?

COUNTRY DWELLER

DEAR DWELLER: There is not enough space in this column to tell you how wrong I think you are, and why. Suffice it to say that "knowing everything—truthfully and completely" has never corrupted anyone. Ignorance—not truth—corrupts.

Everybody has a problem. What's yours? For a personal reply write to Abby, Box 69700, Los Angeles, Cal. 90069 and enclose a stamped, self-addressed envelope.

THE AGE OF Plastic Is Yet To Come

By GAY PAULEY
UPI Women's Editor
NEW YORK (UPI) — You thought that the 1960's were the age of the plastics? Then wait until the 1980's.

The scientists were predicting 15 years ago in this world of the man-made everything now has come about and again they're looking into the next 15 years. And they're not fooling.

Along with plastics, the computerized method of housekeeping will have taken over in another 15 years, they say.

Most Revolutionary

The most revolutionary aspect of all of tomorrow's household design will be a central computer, controlling all systems of the house-lighting, entertaining, appliances, communications, and so on. Plastics come in for a big share of this kind of thinking.

So say the forecasters, the editors of the trade publication Modern Plastics.

They foresee plastic appliances popping out of walls on command, plastic appliances cleaning the house, washing clothes, making the beds, cooking the meals.

And spanking junior when he misbehaves? Or dispersing the baby?

Enamelling Is Fun For Oil Painter

By GAY PAULEY
UPI Women's Editor
NEW YORK (UPI) — She is an artist who started out painting with oils and watercolors. She switched into the ancient and infinitely precise medium of enamelling "because I can do it in stages. When I was painting, I'd get absorbed... forget to meet the train, for pick up the kids, go to market."

It is Valquette speaking, the Nebraska-born artist who specializes in designs created by fusing molten glass to metal. Tools for her art and she believes she is one of the few making it a fine art are electric kilns which can be heated to as much as 2500 degrees Fahrenheit, copper, gold, silver, powdered glass, asbestos gloves, fire and acid-proof apron, tongs, shovel, sulphuric acid, wood, hammer and saws.

"Yes, I'm a bit of a carpenter too," says the unusual artist. "I can rewire the ovens if necessary. You have to learn to do a little of everything."

The artist had just had some of her works exhibited at the Theodore Herzl Institute, an organization to promote understanding of Israel. That exhibit was mainly of Hebrew themes. But Valquette does abstracts, portraits, whatever area of art she has sketched in world travels.

The Guns of Judgment Day

Cliff Farrell's new Western thriller

From the Doubleday & Co. novel. Copyright © 1967, by Cliff Farrell. Distributed by King Features Syndicate.

"That's only about half a mile. You'd have to cut wire to get through, or risk getting bogged down, tryin' to swim horse around where the fence extends into the water."

Dan mounted and rode along the fence toward the river. The fence was nearly to the stream when he pulled up. Ahead, the perched wire dangled loosely from post to post in the moonlight. Two shot horses had entered Shannon range through the cut in the fence, and had returned. The hootmarks were very fresh.

Dan mounted again without a word, and they headed down the river. They passed Shacktown, which still lay unlighted and apparently asleep. No sound came. Not even a dog barked.

When they reached the fork in the trail, Dan spoke. "Go back to Spanish Bell, Emmons. Stay with Kathleen. Never leave her alone again. Both you and Emilio stand guard until I come back."

"You think the Shannons might try to kill even Katey? A woman?"

"Now which of the Shannons would likely do a thing like that?" Dan asked.

He left Alex and rode off, heading down the trail toward Flat Butte.

It was scarcely more than an hour before first daybreak when the lights that still burned in Flat Butte appeared ahead. Dan had encountered no traveler on the ride except the doctor.

The night held the acrid scent of lathered horses and cooling saddle leather. Dan moved to a hiding place from which he could watch Willie's house. It seemed to him the voices were now raised in anger, but he still could not make out the words. Finally, a rear door opened. The light inside had been snuffed. All he could make out were moving shadows.

Saddle leather creaked. Weary horses drew slobbering signs of protest. Two men rode out of the stable, Sand and Marko. They evidently avoided the heart of the settlement as they rode out of town. Dan felt sure they were heading for Shacktown.

He returned to his horse, mounted and retraced his own route down the trail.

Kathleen and Alex were awake and waiting at Royal House. They came to meet him as he dismounted.

Dan spoke to Kathleen. "Who lives in a dove-built house on the east end of town? Place is well kept up, with a stable at back."

"That would be Obie Willie's house," she said.

"I just wanted to make sure," Dan said.
