Joe Frazier Wins Over Jimmy Ellis

By WILLIAM VERGANO

NEW YORK UPI - Joe Frazier, 26-year-old lightweight contender who has made the big talk in boxing, got the big test he was looking for when he met the big idol, Jimmy Ellis, in a 20-round decision here last night.

Frazier, a 20-1 favorite, gained the decision of three of the five judges and had the other two split with the result 10-9-0.

Frazier outpointed Ellis from the opening bell, hitting the fellow from Mobile, Ala., with heavy, straight punches which kept the challenger back on his heels.

The 6-foot-1, 176-pounder from Louisville, Ky., floored Ellis in the 15th round with a left to the head, which Ellis never recovered from.

In the last round, Ellis was downed with a left hook, but it was as though the decision had already been made.

Ellis had no trouble in his first five rounds, but Frazier gained his first lead in the sixth round, in which Ellis was hurt by a right.

He was downed in the 15th round, but came back to win the 16th and 17th.

Frazier's record is now 31-0-1 with 23 knockouts, while Ellis is 51-10-4 with 19 knockouts.

Frazier was joined in the ring by his sparring partner, former world champion Muhammad Ali.

The match was refereed by Tony DeMarco.

Frazier, who is a contender for the title, was rated a solid favorite by the bookmakers.

Ellis, who was listed as a 200-pounder, would not weigh less than 175.

Although Frazier is the more heavily favored, he had made it clear that Ellis wouldn't have a problem with his reaching the weight limitation.

Widower has right style but wrong woman

DEAR ABBY: Everyone has a problem, and now of a whole I have one I am in actions and have been seeing for ten years. I want to marry her. I have loved her in a town near town. She is in my age bracket. Even though she and I are not so far apart, I am somewhat afraid of what she presents.

I asked her on Tuesday to have a date, and I could not see anything wrong. I just want to make sure. If she is anything like I presented her, I must use care because the presents come to make.

I am not a very imaginative fellow. What shall I do? NOT INTERESTED

DEAR AGGIE: We live very close to my husband's family, which includes his widowed mother and several brothers and sisters. They are all very nice and helpful, but there are always a few who are difficult. There is always a fight and arguing among them.

My mother-in-law always speaks first. She has a habit of "dropping in" all the time, and no matter how long I am there, she will still come to visit on her own. This makes me feel uncomfortable. Should I try to make her understand that I need her to stay because the presents come to make.

DEAR ABBY: I am in a situation that is causing me a lot of stress. I am in a long-term relationship with a woman who has character issues. Despite her flaws, I still care for her deeply.

Our relationship has been rocky for some time now, and I have tried to address these issues with her. She has been unresponsive to my concerns and continues to exhibit problematic behavior. I believe it is important for me to communicate clearly and set boundaries in order to maintain a healthy relationship.

I am considering seeking support from a counselor or therapist to help navigate this situation. I value our relationship and want to find a way to make it work. Can you provide any advice or guidance on how to better address and manage these challenges in a constructive manner?

Thank you in advance for your wisdom and support.

DEAR Anonymous:

It is essential to communicate openly and honestly about your concerns to your partner. It is important to express your feelings and be willing to listen to her perspective. Establishing clear boundaries is crucial for maintaining a healthy relationship. Seeking support from a professional counselor or therapist can be beneficial in navigating these challenges.

Communication is key when addressing these issues. Try to approach the conversation with empathy and understanding. It may be helpful to set specific, achievable goals for improving the situation. Remember, personal growth and change often require time and effort. Taking care of yourself and seeking support along the way can also be beneficial.

Good luck as you continue to explore this situation and work towards a resolution.
