Kentucky Lake State Park Gets Priority In Aid Plan

Revenue Bond Issue Is Set

Kentucky Lake State Park was named top priority in an action Saturday by Governor Willis' cabinet to authorize Conservation Commissioner Harold A. Browning to negotiate the issuance of revenue bonds to build tourist hotels, cabins and other facilities at six State parks.

Browning estimated it may take between one and one-half and two million dollars to bring about the suggested expansion of facilities. Other parks listed for improvement were Cumberland Falls, Natural Bridge, Carter Caves, Butler and Pennyrite.

After park officials and investment brokers agree on the sizes of hotels, the projects' costs will be determined accurately. After the investment men approve the cost estimates, construction bids will be advertised as quickly as possible, Browning said.

Browning said the State-owned hotels will be operated by the parks division and not by private concessionaires as had been proposed originally.

He pointed out that holders of revenue bonds would have no lien on the improvements, but only on the revenues derived therefrom.

V.F.W. POST GETS SENATE BACKING ON FARM FUND

Overbey Says Two Kentucky Senators For Appropriation

George Ed Overbey, commander of the Calloway County Veterans of Foreign Wars Post No. 5638, said today that Kentucky Senators Alben W. Barkley and John Sherman Cooper have indicated to him their approval of the local post's endorsement of favorable action in Congress toward restoring the Agriculture Department's funds, recently recommended for a slash in the House of Representatives.

Senator Barkley replied in part: "I deeply deplore the cut made by the House in what seemed to me to be an essential appropriation in the agriculture program. I think that we may be able to restore a part, if not all, of the appropriation in the Senate, although I cannot promise it. I shall be glad to do what I can to restore this cut in order not to cripple the work of the department in this field."

Former Resident Says Issues Clear

Declaring that the primary issue of the Democratic gubernatorial primary was the people versus private interests and charging his opponent, Earle C. Clements, Morganfield, as obligated to the privileged few, Harry Lee Waterfield, native son of Calloway county, opened his campaign for Kentucky's chief executive here Saturday before one of the largest crowds ever to assemble in Calloway county.

In asking the Democratic nomination on August 2, Waterfield laid down a program of expansion and improvement in all branches of state government and said the specific issue concerning Democratic voters was that of rural electrification and cheap power, T.V.A., and R.E.A. as opposed to private utilities.

Waterfield's address, preceded by short talks by representatives of Kentucky's congressional districts, was broadcast throughout the state and cheered by the large crowd which flocked to the court house square from all over the state and the First District. Motorcades came from several towns in the district and city and county officials from all over the Purchase came to Murray to hear a man, born and educated in Calloway, bid for the District's first native governor in 155 years of statehood.

Mayor George Hart of Murray presided at the opening and Adron Drown, graduate of Murray State College and former president of the Kentucky Education Association, introduced the other speakers.

Waterfield Off To A Good Start

Never in the history of Calloway County have the Democrats given a better reception to one of their sons seeking high office than they gave Harry Lee Waterfield, candidate for governor, here Saturday afternoon.

Despite the fact Saturday was a cool day — an ideal time for farmers to keep tractors running in an effort to catch up with their planting — the crowd attending the Waterfield rally was one that should make him realize the home folks are backing him solidly in his bid for the Democratic nomination.

His opening speech was all that could be desired, and it is gratifying to know that his Murray audience was multiplied many fold as it was broadcast to every county in the state by radio.

One of the district speakers made a pertinent statement Saturday afternoon when he said the Democrats will either nominate Waterfield in August or the cause of cheap electricity and the REA in Kentucky is lost.

The record in the legislature in 1944, and again in 1946, is too fresh in the memory of every citizen of this county to doubt that if it had not been for Harry Lee Waterfield the private power industry in Kentucky would have destroyed TVA, so far as this state is concerned, as well as to prevent for a long time to come the blessings of rural electrification.

We were pleased to hear Waterfield discuss the educational situation in his opening speech. He is a graduate of Murray State College and it will be mighty nice to have a Murray graduate in the governor's mansion. But Saturday he put himself on record as a friend of elementary as well as higher education in Kentucky. And we know from his past record that he will have the moral courage to carry out his convictions.

The people of the First District clearly demonstrated what they think of Waterfield and reports from the other districts of the state indicate his organization is one of the best any Democratic candidate has had in several years.

Calloway County is proud of Harry Lee Waterfield and we sincerely hope his supporters throughout the state will leave no stone unturned until he wins the nomination. Then in November we will have a real chance to reclaim the state government.

Outstanding Record

The last two weekly issues of the Murray Ledger & Times carried news reports and illustrations about Murray boy scouts who will attend the 1947 World Scout Jamboree in Molsion, France, August 2-22.

When we consider the fact that approximately 1,000 scouts from all sections of America will attend the jamboree and four of them are from Murray, a city of only 5,000 population, we realize scouting here is well above the average.

And when anything is above the average there is a reason. In the case of scouting in Murray the reason is Ralph Wear, scout master for Troop 45, who has served in that capacity for the past fourteen years.

Two weeks ago when it became known in Murray that Ralph Wear had been selected as one of the 66 scout masters to attend the jamboree his friends quietly raised a purse amounting to $700.00 to apply on his expenses in making the trip.

The committee that raised the fund stated they never participated in such an effort in which they had greater pleasure, and that several times that amount could have been raised had it been necessary.

It could indeed be difficult to estimate the good that has been done by devoting at least one evening out of fourteen years to training boys in the principles of scouting. Many of his scouts served in the recent war and some are holding positions of honor and trust in their communities.

Proper Use of DDT on Livestock

By N. F. Fox, County Agent
When we began our eradication work with DDT on beef cattle and Dairy Herd Improvement, Dr. W. A. Price, head of the Entomology Department of the University of Kentucky, gave us some pertinent information on the use of this insecticide. He pointed out that a concentration of DDT that might be effective on some flies are more difficult to kill than others. For instance, the house fly is killed with a small amount of DDT, but the stable fly and the house fly require only a DDT concentration of 100 times as much. As a result of the use of a stronger concentration of DDT, more of the insecticide is needed to obtain the same lasting results. This is especially true when the labor involved in spraying is considered.

It should be given when the insecticide is followed by a second one. The second treatment, thereafter, should be sprayed around the animal.

You must say for most men that they eat what's put in front of them and shut up. This is discouraging when the little man has attempted something special, but she rewarded her on her off days.

Every modern convenience for living without servants is contained in this house which has just been built in Short Hills, New Jersey, with the aid of some of the nation's leading builders. Four Generations At Cleaver Reunion

On Sunday, June 15, a surprise birthday dinner was given at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Everett Cleaver in honor of Mr. Cleaver's 62nd birthday. Four generations were present, the oldest, Mrs. Alice Cleaver, being 92 years old and the youngest, Daniel Grey Cleaver, 5 1/2 months old. Mr. Cleaver's children were there, but one, Mrs. E. E. Hoover of Baton Rouge, La., who visited her father some few weeks ago. A large table on the lawn held the food which everyone greatly enjoyed. Those present were: Mr. and Mrs. Everett Cleaver, Mrs. Meloris Marie Cleaver, Mr. and Mrs. Cecil Cleaver and son, Bob, Mr. and Mrs. Alice Cleaver, Mr. and Mrs. Almo, Mr. Otto Cleaver, Roswell N. M., and Mrs. Ophus Cleaver and daughter, Deborah Ann and grandson, Lee. Mr. and Mrs. Morris Rogers, Mr. and Mrs. B. F. Brown and children, Mr. Franklin and Patricia, Dianna and Mrs. James S. Carr and daughter, Sandra Annette, who is making their home in East St. Louis, but formerly of Murray, Mr. and Mrs. L. D. Miller of Murray, and Mrs. Z. B. Crouse and children, Elvin, Ronald, Brenda Kay, and Linda Fay, Mr. and Mrs. George Linn and son, Boyd, of Murray, and Mrs. Dora Brown of Murray.

Fighting Parson—The Rev. Dr. Alvin E. Magary, pastor of the Lafayette Avenue Presbyterian Church, Brooklyn, N. Y., disarmed and soundly thrashed George Smith, 20-year-old, 5-foot Negro who broke into his home and attempted to assault his wife. The minister emerged from fray unscathed.

The horns, neck, shoulders, back, sides, belly, hindquarters and legs, using about one quart of the mixture to each animal. One obstacle to the general use of DDT spray has been the amount of equipment and labor involved, spraying an entire herd, or spraying the inside walls of the cattle barns is undertaken. The size of the herd to be treated determines, of course, the type sprayer to be used. If only a few animals, say ten or less, are to be sprayed, a quart-hand sprayer will be sufficient. If 40 or 50 cattle or even more, a knapsack sprayer will do the job. For larger herds and for the spraying of the interior of a barn, a power sprayer is the most satisfactory. Our test this summer were carried on entirely with the hand or knapsack sprayer.

Wettable powder containing DDT is the only form of this insecticide recommended by the Kentucky Department of Entomology to be used in the treatment of cattle for flies. We find some farmers who are using DDT suspended in oil for this purpose. If this material is used to any extent it is irritating to the skin and the animal, while the wettable powder containing DDT has no had effects on the skin whatever.

The water-suspensible powders found on the market usually contain 25 per cent or 50 per cent DDT. We use a spray containing 2.5 per cent DDT. This is obtained by stirring 1 1/2 pounds of the 50 per cent powder in three gallons of water, or 2 1/2 pounds of the 25 per cent powder in the same amount of water. This same solution may be used in spraying the interior of the barn if precaution is taken against spraying the feed or the mangers. Shaking the sprayer from time to time so that the mixture is kept in even suspension is very important, no matter what kind of sprayer is being used.

It's relaxing to attend to our personal problems and let Walter Lippman dissect the international ideologies.

You must say for most men that they eat what's put in front of them and shut up. This is discouraging when the little man has attempted something special, but she rewarded her on her off days.

Baltimore Brothers Claim New Radio Development Will Eliminate Static

BALTIMORE (UP)—A staticless radio has been invented by two brothers who have been living "on borrowed time" since 1921. The new home radio, which they say eliminates noise even during violent thunderstorms, was developed by the Story brothers, C. Baker, 42, and Robert, 32.

Story hopes to sell the invention to a prominent radio manufacturing company which has been considering it for several weeks. Recently the brothers held a laboratory demonstration for one of the manufacturer's engineers. Screwdriver blades were scraped up and down the antenna. A buffer motor was turned on right next to the radio, but even a near-by thunderstorm failed to produce static. Story has been in the radio business for 22 years. He said he has found out that the one thing the home-user wants more than anything else in a radio is no static. The device, he said, "was extremely complicated to figure out, but as far as the home-user is concerned, it will be as simple as apple pie." According to Story, the new radio eliminates all static, even that scratchy sound between stations. It doesn't pick up the sound of vacuum cleaners or other home appliances and it's immune to thunder and lightning. Story also claims that his brain child is practically indestructible. "You can drop it on the floor without hurting it. Furthermore, the radio can be repaired in 7 to 10 minutes by a radio repairman. No matter what's wrong, all the repairman needs is a screwdriver and a tube tester," Story said.

EXAMINE HOUSE FOR FLAWS, HOME BUYERS ARE ADVISED

It is a common mistake for a prospective buyer to inspect the interior of a house before and often without making important observations as to its construction from outside. Often the story told by the back yard is more important than that told by the front yard.

The buyer should take his time when examining the exterior, because hedges and shrubbery are effective screens.

Among things to examine from the outside is the foundation. If more than a foot above lawn grade, this may indicate wet sub-soil, a rock condition or simply (and most generally) a matter of saving the cost of additional excavation. An abnormal amount of exposed foundation in a dry location is nothing more than skipping. Therefore, evidence of similar short-cuts on the builder's part may naturally be expected in other parts of the structure. Incidentally, the lawn should slope away from the foundation for effective drainage.

Look for Leaks

Examine the shingles and clapboard siding and notice if any are split. Test the stucco and mortar joints by scratching with a hard instrument. If mortar falls away easily, it means an eventual repair bill. The roof should not have any broken or curling shingles and should be free from any unevenness.

Return after a heavy rain, if possible, and look for leaks along the chimney and rafters inside the house. This is also an excellent test. If it does, water marks will

The prospective buyer should contain his enthusiasm over "cute" gadgets for the moment and determine how well the structure is built. Jump on the middle of the floors of the living room and large bedroom and notice vibration; then compare with other houses to determine which is more firmly built.

Colliding Doors

Colliding doors are an annoyance—and a lot of "houses" have them. Observe whether all the rooms have cross-ventilation and if they have plenty of daylight. A good time to examine a home is on a gloomy day. Find out whether the house is insulated, how it was done, with what material and whether the insulation is fireproof.

The "model house" in a subdivision or large development can be expected to display all the neatness and the best of construction details at the builder's command. If the prospective buyer is satisfied with the superficial appearance of the model, then other houses in various stages of construction should be examined to observe the quality of materials and workmanship; much of which is hidden in the model. Look for labels on paint cans and markings on lumber and other materials with the thought in mind that standard, advertised products are generally the best.

MADMAN'S MAZE

By CAMERON DOCKERY

CHAPTER ONE
"EAST, HENLEY NEXT STOP!"
 The bus door closed with a harsh clatter that made the passenger nearest the entrance start. He was a youngish man wearing a fedora and trench coat. He smiled to himself. "East Henley meant home—home after four years in the China-India-Burma theater."

His smile grew as he turned and looked out the window at the Maryland countryside beyond the mud-spattered pane he watched tick-tack fence, clumps of dead tobacco, Queen Anne's lace, sun- and wild holly slip past and vanish in the obscuring veil of drizzle and oncoming night. To the casual eye, they meant nothing, to him they meant death. He thought of them so often when he was down to the Hump. Now, here they were—the reality.

His eyes shortened their focus and he was staring at his own reflection in the winduppane. He'd

Her instructions to the driver came floating back to Jeff. "Take me to Madder Hall," she said imperiously. His home! Why was she going there?

"Sure it's getting a lot of visitors while they waited for East Henley's one traffic light to change. Jeff stared at the back of the driver's neck. He recognized him now. It was Willie Sparrow, who had been a small grocery—an awkward slant of a fellow just waiting for a moment.

"From the way Madder Hall didn't you?" Willie repeated uncertainly as he started the car.

"Yes," Jeff said irritably. "Is there anything so strange about that?"

"So many people say there go. And only last week I took Mr. Geoffrey Madder home."

"No, sir I mean Mister Jeff. He had his uniform on—just getting back from the Pacific. He had on dark glasses just like you and he didn't seem to know me at first. I had to tell him who I was. The man said, 'Oh Willie Sparrow! Of course! How could I have forgotten you, Willie?'"

"Oh, yes it was! Willie insisted that was the same man he looked the same. Guess I know East Henley folks when I see 'em!"

Hughes Says 'Radar Gadget' Would Have Prevented Airlines Disasters

Culver City, Cal., June 16—UP—Four of the past 19 days' six airplane disasters would have been prevented by a little radar gadget he demonstrated here six weeks ago, Howard Hughes said today.

The four crashes took 127 lives. The gadget is a radar altimeter that flashes a light and squawks a horn when a plane comes within 2000 feet of any obstacle. It makes it impossible for a normally-operated plane to fly into a mountain, as four of the six have done.

Hughes cited the deaths of 40 in an Army C-54 crash in Japan May 29 and 25 more the same day in an Iceland Airways crash in Iceland, the crash of a night of a Capital Airliner in the Blue Ridge Mountains with 50 dead, and the crash early yesterday of a B-29 at Springfield, Vt., with 12 deaths.

Only two could not have been prevented by the Hughes Radar Altimeter, he said. They were the crash in takeoff from Laguna Field May 29 of a United Airliner and the sudden plummeting into the ground then following day of an Eastern Airliner near Bainbridge, Md.

"If everything was normal with these other ships, as everything seems to indicate," the airplane designer and builder said, "then the device—has—perfectly—here—would have prevented them all."

"Most crashes are of this type, and that's why we designed the apparatus."

Vacation In Kentucky State Parks

By RUSSELL DYCHE, Director Kentucky State Parks

Now that the Kentucky Derby is run and Dogwood Winter is behind us and Mountain Laurel and Rhododendron are in the offing, Kentuckians are turning an eye to their highways and thinking of vacation time. Thousands of them are depending upon their State Parks for vacation opportunities; and tens of thousands, yes, hundreds of thousands, will examine the recreational value of them. Though much remains to be done to prepare our parks for their fullest service to the public, progress is being made and they are in better position to care for their guests than ever before.

Lodges, inns and vacation cabins in Kentucky State Parks have facilities for full week vacations for more than five thousand persons during the three Summer months alone, and group camps and tent and trailer camping grounds offer opportunity to thousands more. Vacation cabins, fully equipped, will be found in Audubon State Park near Henderson, Butler State Park near Carrollton, Levi Jackson State Park near London, and Pennyrite State Park near Dawson Springs; while Kentucky Ridge Recreation Area, adjoining Pine Mountain State Park near Pineville, operated by the Division of Forestry, offers an additional ten housekeeping cabins. In Natural Bridge State Park in the scenic Red River Valley is the popular Hemlock Lodge, while Cumberland Falls has its duPont Lodge, Moonbowling and 25 cabins. Cumberland Falls has the highest rating of any State Park in entire Region One of the National Park Service, comprising several states.

Some of our State Parks without vacation facilities have high visitor ratings. My Old Kentucky Home at Bardonia, Old Fort Harbo, Carter Caves, newest of them all, near Olive Hill, and Blue Licks, between Paris and Mayfield, and there are Columbus-Bellmont at Columbus, Lexington, Kentucky Lake—now being developed, Lincoln Homestead near Springfield, and Dr. Thomas Walker near Barbourville.

Four-color folders illustrating and describing all Kentucky State Parks may be had at any of the parks or by writing the Division of Parks, Frankfort. Separate folders also are available for several.

Use Kentucky State Parks—they are yours!

SPORTS AFIELD

By Ted Kesting

No real boating enthusiast enjoys seeing a good runabout, inboard or outboard, standing unused; idly simple because the owner has never discovered how, or in how many different ways, he can get real, keen enjoyment from it. Willard Crandall, boating expert, offers two suggestions.

As water-ski designs improve, and as riders and drivers learn more of the technique, this sport is becoming less difficult to master well enough so swimming is not the principal feature. Consequently, water-skiing is spurring in popularity. The skis do not differ greatly from those used in the snow. The water-ski holds the rope attached to the boat, his feet controlling, or trying to control, the skis.

It's not too easy. The skis may take independent directions, veering, jerking, going upward, outward, downward, sideways or trying to roll over and over. The start is the hard part. A fast start is absolutely essential, for there is not the surface to the skis to support weight at slow speed. Ordinarily the rider sits on the dock, feet on the skis, taking off when the rope is held, to the boat, becomes "air" momentarily, ducking, liver on the novice's first attempt at starts, but occasionally a neophyte will start successfully, his first time, regrettably probably, but avoiding a swim.

Don't pass up a chance to give water-skiing or aquaplaning a trial. If you're past the aquaplaning safety driving. You'll have no trouble finding riders if you furnish boat and board. It's a fine way to use that runabout.

Learning to ride an aquaplane is not difficult. "Watch any group of kids learning a large enough group so no one feels overly self-conscious, and see how quickly nearly all of them catch on. Nor is competent driving hard to learn, for an experienced aquaplaner can soon show the driver much of what is wanted, as the driver who has pulled many aquaplanes can help anyone trying to ride the board for the first time.

Hardest for the beginner to learn is getting up on the board. A fall enough is necessary while getting underway. The novice should then rise very slowly, getting the feel of balance. Once he has this, and it doesn't take much experience to get it, he can control the board

Includes text: 'Readers of Raeburn Van Buren's comic "Abbie an' Slats" in the Ledger and Times who are impressed and delighted by the excellence of its drawings have their opinion confirmed by the best of authority. The Chicago Academy of Fine Arts uses "Abbie an' Slats" as an example for its students to follow. This was made known in a letter to Van Buren from a student at the school, Tom Smith, of 2109 East Miner Street, Des Plaines, Ill. Smith wrote: "Our problem last week was a Sunday sheet in color. Well, the instructor brought down about five of your Sunday cartoons and pointed out the beautiful way in which you always handled your colors, your variety in ideas and—well, I could go on forever about your drawing. But it would all boil down to one thing, it's swell. Keep up the good work." Dr. John Dixon of Daviess county planted a acre of grafted pecans and varieties of walnuts.'

Peru Constructing Project Similar To Tennessee Valley Development

By HARRY W. FRANTZ
United Press Staff Correspondent
CHIMBOTE, Peru (U.P.)—Development plans for the Santa River in the north of Peru will result eventually in an industrial revolution comparable to that of the Tennessee Valley with a deep sea harbor added for good measure.

All Peru watches with interest the progress of the Canyon of the Pato hydroelectric project in the upper waters of the Santa River. It will make possible a program of "regional planning" comparable to that already realized in the Tennessee Valley and now intended by congressional proposals for a Missouri Valley Authority.

The harnessing of water power in the Santa River is already anticipated by the construction of modern power houses, housing coal-loading equipment and other improvements at the harbor of Chimbote, an almost land-locked bay capable of accommodating the entire merchant marine that serves the west coast of South America.

Tunnel Being Built

Key to the entire program is the deep canyon of granite known as the Canyon del Pato, which falls nearly 1,700 feet in 8.2 miles. By means of a tunnel 5.7 miles long, already under construction, a gross fall of 1,400 feet will be used to generate in an underground powerhouse 125,000 kilowatts.

Supplementing this hydroelectric development—large deposits of anthracite have been found in the same region, and shipments of anthracite to foreign countries, especially Argentina, have begun.

The Corporacion Peruana del Santa is similar in its objective of complete regional planning with your T.V.A. and is the first embodiment of its kind in Peru, explained Engineer Santiago Antunez de Mayolo, who discovered the power site a quarter century ago. He accompanied the United States press party on its inspection trip to the project.

Long Transmission Line

The electric power from the Canon del Pato will be carried to Chimbote through a 132,000-volt transmission line, 57 miles long, he said. "Another transmission line will run through the canyon de Huaylas carrying power to the densely populated valley with many towns and to the mines in the Andes.

"At the port of Chimbote, the Corporacion Peruana del Santa has planned the installation of zinc and lead electrolytic plants. Peru having large deposits of these metals, frequently associated with silver and copper. The roasting process of sulphurizing ore will give, as a by-product, great quantities of sulphuric acid for the chemical industries and the refining of petroleum in the north.

Chimbote will become a great industrial port of Peru, with its electrolytic plants, its magnificent harbor and modern port, its coal storage facilities and railway penetrating the Santa and Chiquiera valleys, where there are vast deposits of high-grade anthracite.

Project Is Bold

The ambitious development further, the Corporacion Peruana del Santa is now installing prior to the construction of the transmission line from the Canon del Pato, a 4,000-kilowatt gas turbine at the port of Chimbote.

Because of the dizzy heights of the precipitous along the river and the use of cable trams to cross the river at many points, the project started North American observers by its structural boldness. Work goes on night and day, and the deep gorge presents a strange scene when, lighted at night, the project started North American observers by its structural boldness. Work goes on night and day, and the deep gorge presents a strange scene when, lighted at night, the project started North American observers by its structural boldness.

At present only two Americans are working at the project, although more may come when the Westinghouse generators are ready for installation. Engineer director at the scene is Burton M. Jones, a University of California graduate. The other is Construction Supervisor Clive French, of Colorado State College.

Sheeted Klansmen Swelter At Service

Miami, Fla., June 16 (UP)—The Ku Klux Klan is a hardy outfit. Not even the tropical heat of Miami makes the Klansmen shed their customary raiment.

Some 40 members of the John B. Gordon Klavern sweltered with their wives and children yesterday in St. Paul's Lutheran Church here to pray for the soul of Bob Woelfel, Klansman and member of the suburban Hialeah fire department, who died of a heart attack.

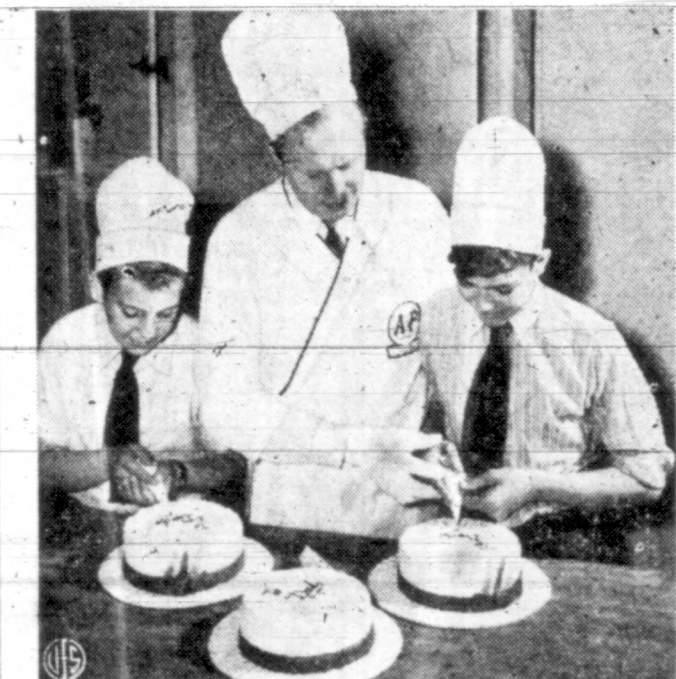

The Klansmen, shirt-sleeved beneath the hot robes which they removed upon leaving the tiny church, recognized Miami Herald photographer Robert Verlin on the street. The cameraman had been mugged up while covering a KKK meeting here six months ago.

"Don't take a picture," they shouted to Verlin, "or you'll get the same treatment again." The photographer removed the flashbulb from his camera as a ring of the Klansmen formed around him.

A Klan spokesman, W. H. Tyler, Jr., said that the re-voicing by the state of Georgia of the Klan charter did not affect his group.

"We're independent," Tyler said, "and we're just holding memorial services for our brother, Mr. Woelfel. It's time your reporters left."

Miami police had patrolled the street outside the church during the services but were not present for the exchange between the Klansmen and the newsmen.
